Instead of the terms "port" and "starboard," which are used nowadays, they used to talk of "larboard" and "starboard." Starboard has nothing in common with stars, but is really the Anglo-Saxon "steer board" for "steer side," because in all galleys which were steered by an oar the oar was fixed somewhat to the right hand side of the stern, and the helmsman held the inboard portion in his right hand. "Larboard" was probably a corruption of lower board, the larboard side being inferior to the other.
The "jury mast" has nothing in common with a jury except its derivation from the same word, "jour," the French word meaning day. The jury mast is one which is put up temporarily—for a day—just as a jury in its legal term meant a tribunal summoned for a short period only.

Struck by Lightning.
Mrs. Nancy Cleary, of Brewers, N. C., suffered as if struck by lightning. She says: "I was almost paralyzed from my waist down and my back hurt me constantly, from female troubles. I had headache, seemed always tired, and felt as if I was dying. I took wine of Cardui, which cured me, and now I feel like a new person." Cardui relieves periodical pain, and makes sick women well. $1.00 at drug stores.

Norwegian Heirlooms.
Among the marriage customs in Norway one of the quaintest is the presentation of a pair of spoons—wooden or silver, according to the position of the family—to the bride and bridegroom of the day. These spoons are connected with each other by means of a chain and are generally adorned with mottoes or appropriate proverbs. Many of them have been handed down from one generation to another and are looked upon as heirlooms. They are inscribed with such maxims as "A soft answer turneth away wrath" and "Good food satisfied hunger." Another heirloom which is much valued in Norway is the silver "peg tankard" used for fetes or weddings. This is often richly chased and decorated with the arms of the country, while tiny silver pegs placed at regular intervals one above the other in the inside of the cup indicate the draft which in olden times was supposed to be taken by each guest without drawing a breath.

AN EVERY-DAY STRUGGLE.
Men and Women of Every Occupation Suffer Miseries From Kidney Complaint.

J. C. Lightner, 703 So. Cedar St., Abilene, Kansas, is one of the thousands who suffer from kidney troubles brought on by daily work. "I first noticed it eight or ten years ago," said Mr. Lightner. "The dull pain in the back fairly made me sick. It was hard to get up or down, hard to straighten, hard to do any work that brought a strain on the back. I had frequent attacks of gravel and the urine was passed too often and with pain. When I used Doan's Kidney Pills, however, all traces of the trouble disappeared and have not returned. I am certainly grateful."

Rainfall and Tree Growth.
A report has recently been published which shows how closely the growth of trees is dependent upon rainfall. Not only was this seen in the case of one and two-year-old trees, but in an investigation extending over a period of twelve years, during which time the annual rings of growth were carefully examined. With an annual precipitation of from thirty to thirty-five inches a width of ring was produced varying from .11 to .35 inch. If, on the other hand, there was either an unusually large or small rainfall in any given year this was followed by a corresponding tree growth in the following year.

RUNNING SORES ON LIMBS.
Little Girl's Obstinate Case of Eczema—Mother Says: "Cuticura Remedies a Household Standby."

"Last year, after having my little girl treated by a very prominent physician for an obstinate case of eczema, I resorted to the Cuticura Remedies, and was so well pleased with the almost instantaneous relief afforded that we discarded the physician's prescription and relied entirely on the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills. When we commenced with the Cuticura Remedies her feet and limbs were covered with running sores. In about six weeks we had her completely well, and there has been no recurrence of the trouble. We find that the Cuticura Remedies are a valuable household standby, living as we do twelve miles from a doctor, and where it costs from twenty to twenty-five dollars to come up on the mountain. Mrs. Lizzie Vincent Thomas, Fairmount, Walden's Ridge, Tenn., Oct. 13, 1905."

BOX OF WAFERS FREE—NO DRUGS—CURES BY ABSORPTION.
Cures Belching of Gas—Bad Breath and Bad Stomach—Short Breath—Bloating—Sour Eructations—Irregular Heart, Etc.

Take a Mull's Wafer any time of the day or night, and note the immediate good effect on your stomach. It absorbs the gas, disinfects the stomach, kills the poison germs and cures the disease. Catarrh of the head and throat, unwholesome food and overeating make bad stomachs. Scarcely any stomach is entirely free from taint of some kind. Mull's Anti-Belch Wafers will make your stomach healthy by absorbing foul gases which arise from the undigested food and by re-enforcing the lining of the stomach, enabling it to thoroughly mix the food with the gastric juices. This cures stomach trouble, promotes digestion, sweetens the breath, stops belching and fermentation. Heart action becomes strong and regular through this process.
Discard drugs, as you know from experience they do not cure stomach trouble. Try a common-sense (Nature's) method that does cure. A soothing, healing sensation results instantly.
We know Mull's Anti-Belch Wafers will do this, and we want you to know it. This offer may not appear again.

In Buenos Ayres horse racing is a social institution, as much so as the Spanish bull fight. All the elite, from the president and his cabinet down, attend the meeting, although the races are invariably held on Sunday. The jockey club is quite as modern and luxurious and exclusive as in London or Paris, and the initiation fee is three times as much. The club takes a small percentage of all bets made, and it is said that nearly $15,000,000 is yearly wagered on this "sport of kings."

A Strange Story.
Mrs. Isaac W. Austill of Chestnut Ridge, N. C., tells a strange story of great suffering. "I was in bad condition for months," she writes, "under treatment of doctors, but got no relief. My periods had stopped, all but the pain. After taking part of a bottle of Wine of Cardui, nature worked properly and without pain. I advise all suffering women to use Cardui." A pure specific remedy for women's ills. $1.00, at druggists.

Fearless South African Birds.
Birds are said to be much more tame and confiding in South Africa than they are at home, probably because there they are much less molested.
The Cape swallow often builds in the living room of the up-country Boer, fastening its nest to some part of the roof timber. The Boer, whose house is usually haunted by a plague of flies, not only tolerates the swallows, but encourages them. The swallows on their part wage constant warfare upon the swarms of flies, and flit constantly in and out, hawking about the chamber with a perfect fearlessness quite delightful to see.
Among other South African birds which manifest this wonderful tameness is the Cape wagtail, which not only penetrates to the living room in search of flies, but will pick them from the old Boer's veischoons as he sits on his stoop and perch about his chair.—Country Life.

Blessing the Beasts.
A quaint ceremony is witnessed in parts of Normandy twice a year. It is the "blessing of the beasts." The cows, asses and a few thoroughbred horses which are raised in that part of France are brought together in front of the church, whence issues a procession of gayly dressed peasants to the sound of a chant sung by the priest and people. Then the pastor sprinkles a few drops of water on the head of each animal. Sometimes as many as a couple of hundred peasants take part in the ceremony, but not a trace of levity is to be seen on their faces. When the ceremony is completed the procession passes through the village singing, and then disperses.

WHO SHE WAS

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF LYDIA E. PINKHAM

And a True Story of How the Vegetable Compound Had Its Birth and How the "Panic of '73" Caused it to be Offered for Public Sale in Drug Stores.

This remarkable woman, whose maiden name was Estes, was born in Lynn, Mass., February 9th, 1819, coming from a good old Quaker family. For some years she taught school, and became known as a woman of an alert and investigating mind, an earnest seeker after knowledge, and above all, possessed of a wonderfully sympathetic nature.

In 1843 she married Isaac Pinkham, a builder and real estate operator, and their early married life was marked by prosperity and happiness. They had four children, three sons and a daughter.

In those good old fashioned days it was common for mothers to make their own home medicines from roots and herbs, nature's own remedies—calling in a physician only in specially urgent cases. By tradition and experience many of them gained a wonderful knowledge of the curative properties of the various roots and herbs.

Mrs. Pinkham took a great interest in the study of roots and herbs, their characteristics and power over disease. She maintained that just as nature so bountifully provides in the harvest-fields and orchards vegetable foods of all kinds; so, if we but take the pains to find them, in the roots and herbs of the field there are remedies expressly designed to cure the various ills and weaknesses of the body, and it was her pleasure to search these out, and prepare simple and effective medicines for her own family and friends.

Chief of these was a rare combination of the choicest medicinal roots and herbs found best adapted for the cure of the ills and weaknesses peculiar to the female sex, and Lydia E. Pinkham's friends and neighbors learned that her compound relieved and cured and it became quite popular among them.

All this so far was done freely, without money and without price, as a labor of love.

But in 1873 the financial crisis struck Lynn. Its length and severity were too much for the large real estate interests of the Pinkham family, as this class of business suffered most from fearful depression, so when the Centennial year dawned it found their property swept away. Some other source of income had to be found.

At this point Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was made known to the world.

The three sons and the daughter, with their mother, combined forces to restore the family fortune. They argued that the medicine which was so good for their woman friends and neighbors was equally good for the women of the whole world.

The Pinkhams had no money, and little credit. Their first laboratory was the kitchen, where roots and herbs were steeped on the stove, gradually filling a gross of bottles. Then came the question of selling it, for always before they had given it away freely. They hired a job printer to run off some pamphlets setting forth the merits of the medicine, now called Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and these were distributed by the Pinkham sons in Boston, New York, and Brooklyn.

The wonderful curative properties of the medicine were, to a great extent, self-advertising, for whoever used it recommended it to others, and the demand gradually increased.

In 1877, by combined efforts the family had saved enough money to commence newspaper advertising and from that time the growth and success of the enterprise were assured, until to-day Lydia E. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound have become household words everywhere, and many tons of roots and herbs are used annually in its manufacture.

Lydia E. Pinkham herself did not live to see the great success of this work. She passed to her reward years ago, but not till she had provided means for continuing her work as effectively as she could have done it herself.

During her long and eventful experience she was ever methodical in her work and she was always careful to preserve a record of every case that came to her attention. The case of every sick woman who applied to her for advice—and there were thousands—received careful study, and the details, including symptoms, treatment and results were recorded for future reference, and to-day these records, together with hundreds of thousands made since, are available to sick women the world over, and represent a vast collaboration of information regarding the treatment of woman's ills, which for authenticity and accuracy can hardly be equaled in any library in the world.

With Lydia E. Pinkham worked her daughter-in-law, the present Mrs. Pinkham. She was carefully instructed in all her hard-won knowledge, and for years she assisted her in her vast correspondence.

To her hands naturally fell the direction of the work when its originator passed away. For nearly twenty-five years she has continued it, and nothing in the work shows when the first Lydia E. Pinkham dropped her pen, and the present Mrs. Pinkham, now the mother of a large family, took it up. With woman assistants, some as capable as herself, the present Mrs. Pinkham continues this great work, and probably from the office of no other person have so many women been advised how to regain health. Sick women, this advice is "Yours for Health" freely given if you only write to ask for it.

Such is the history of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; made from simple roots and herbs; the one great medicine for women's ailments, and the fitting monument to the noble woman whose name it bears.

F. E. & C. U. OF A. EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

To the Local and County Unions throughout Alabama—Greeting:

You are hereby called upon to meet either in delegated form or in mass meeting. Also to see that all men and women of your respective counties and communities are aroused, as this is an opportunity that may not come again. You will assemble at the following times and places and will be addressed by one or more of our state officers on the plans and purposes of the Farmers' Union. It is our intention to secure to the farmer the right to price the products of their labor. We now have ware houses in several counties and are building in a number of others, and expect before the products of the farm begin to be placed on the market to be ready to handle the entire crop of our membership, which, if properly done, will be sufficient to dictate an equitable price and secure the same to all our members, and we appeal to you as union men to insist upon your non-union neighbors to come out and hear these discussions.

The dates and places can not be changed, as this is a tremendous undertaking and can only be carried out by the hearty co-operation of the entire membership. The executive committee of each county is expected to do all in their power to make each meeting a success. Provide all the conveniences possible at each place and arrange to have a good time. If any county union should have a meeting already arranged near any of the following dates, they will at once see to it that their dates and places are changed, if they wish to enjoy the benefits to be derived by these rallies as questions of vital importance will be discussed and great questions will be brought before the public. There will also be an executive session held at each appointment for getting our plans before the membership. Remember that we can not under any circumstances change the dates, as they are arranged to follow each other in such a way as to cover the entire State at the very least possible expense. Our ablest speakers will be with you. Lay down your work for one day and come out.

MISS LOTZE KILLED HER CHUM

Duel Over Love Affair Hinted At, But Denied.

Geology Class at Vermillion, S. D Were in Camp--Target Practice, Say Friends.

Vermillion, S. D.—As the result of a mysterious shooting affair, which occurred in the dense woods across the Missouri River from here, Miss Lillian Young, daughter of State Senator Warren Young, is dead at Sioux City, and Miss Hazel Lotze, daughter of C. A. Lotze, of this city, who fired the fatal shot, is dangerously ill from prostration.

Both young women have been students at the State university here. It was twenty-four hours after the shooting occurred that those who saw it were induced to talk about it. They all told the same story—that it was accidental.

In the meantime it had been asserted very positively that the young women had fought a duel to settle some differences over love affairs. This story is forcibly denied by everybody interested, but it continues to be repeated.

Only three besides the two young women saw the shooting. The university authorities are deeply grieved over the matter, and are anxious that no more be said about it, so it is likely there will be no further investigation.

It was a jolly crowd of students, composing the class in geology, that boarded the ferry and crossed to the Nebraska side, in company with Professor E. C. Perisso, to study rock formation.

The camp was pitched in a pretty spot, and while the main body of students prepared the meal a few others strolled off into the woods. These were Miss Young, Miss Lotze, Miss Lillian Stafford, of Flandreau, S. D., daughter of a regent of the university; Thomas Scroggs, of Beresford, S. D., and Clarence H. Mee, of Centreville, S. D.

After awhile those in the camp heard a number of shots and a scream. Running to the scene they found Miss Young on the ground with a bullet wound in her side. She was hurriedly taken to Vermillion and then to Sioux City, where an operation was performed, which revealed that the bullet had penetrated the intestines.

The students said the party had been shooting, using a tree as a target, with a .32 calibre revolver owned by Mee. Several shots had been fired and it came Miss Lotze's turn to try the pistol.

She fired twice and presumably thought the cartridges had all been exploded. At all events she turned toward Miss Young, who was a few yards away picking violets, and pulled the trigger.

Miss Young fell with a cry of pain. She tried to walk, but fell, and then she was put on an improvised stretcher and carried to the ferry.

When it was announced that Miss Young was dead there were few dry eyes among the students, as she was exceedingly popular.

According to the reports received here Ali Shamyl, who is a Kurdish chieftain, and who recently was exiled to Tripoli on the charge of being concerned in the murder of Redvan Pasha at Constantinople, was undergoing an examination when he suddenly rushed upon the Procurator-General, fixed his teeth in his throat, and held on like a bulldog until his victim was throttled to death.

Seattle, Wash.—Frank B. Creffield, leader of the religious organization known as the "Holy Rollers," was shot in the head and killed here by George Mitchell, a laborer.

Creffield and his wife were walking down First avenue when Mitchell, who had been following them, addressed a remark in a low tone to Creffield and then shot him.

AFTER THE DRUG TRUST

Government Begins Action Under Anti-Trust Law.

Injunction Suit Inaugurated in Indiana by Order of Attorney-General Moody.

Washington, D. C.—Practically every person in the United States will feel a lively interest in the anti-trust proceedings begun by the Attorney-General, under direction of the President, against the tripartite combination of druggists and drug manufacturers generally known as the Drug Trust. The petition is filed in the United States Circuit Court in Indiana.

This suit is one more step in the comprehensive program of the Administration to bring within the law business men who are steadily extending monopolistic practices to every branch of trade.

Attorney-General Moody gave out this statement:

"The Government to-day filed in the Circuit Court of the United States for the district of Indiana a petition for an injunction against certain associations, corporations and individuals comprising what is commonly known as the Drug Trust. The parties defendant have combined to control the prices at which proprietary medicines and drugs shall be sold to the consumer through the retail druggists in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust law. The parties to the combination include the Proprietary Association of America, the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and the National Association of Druggists."

The Proprietary Association, the Attorney-General explains, is composed of ninety per cent. of all the manufacturers of patent medicines and proprietary articles, the National Wholesale Druggists' Association is composed of nearly all the wholesale druggists, and the National Association of Retail Druggists is composed of delegates from affiliated local associations of retail druggists, comprising nearly all the retailers in the country. The officers of the associations are made parties defendant to the suit, as well as certain other individuals, firms and corporations who are members of the respective associations.

The bill charges that these associations and their members have entered into a conspiracy to arbitrarily fix and regulate the price at which such commodities shall be sold to the consumer, and that they have established rules and regulations to enforce such an unlawful agreement by restricting the purchase and sale of such commodities to members who live up to and observe such rules and regulations.

No retail druggist can obtain goods from a wholesale druggist or a manufacturer of a proprietary medicine unless such retail druggist becomes a member of the National Association, and in order to become such member he must agree to observe the established price at which such proprietary medicine shall be sold to the consumer. If he cuts prices he is immediately placed upon the list of what is known as "aggressive cutters," and thereafter is unable to obtain goods.

The Department of Justice now has under way or in contemplation suits against at least ten monopolies, or classes of monopolies, and out of them hundreds of suits may grow. They are as follows:

Suit to enjoin Drug Trust.
Suit to enjoin Northwestern Paper Trust.
Suit to enjoin Tobacco Trust.
Suit against rebate by private cars from Pabst Brewing Company.
Suit to enjoin Elevator Trust.
Suit to abolish monopoly of St. Louis Bridge and Terminal Company.
Suit to punish for rebates given to Sugar Trust.
Contemplated suits against hard and soft coal combinations.
Rebate suits contemplated against Standard Oil Company and many railroads.
Indictment of persons in Fertilizer Trust.

It promises to be a period of great activity, not only for the law officers of the Government but for the legal profession, to whom the accused will look for their defense. The Administration has evidently decided that the time for temporizing is past and that a series of heavy blows must be delivered under the Interstate Commerce act and the Sherman Anti-Trust act.

THEFTS BANKRUPT BROKERS.

Harrison Snyder & Son of Philadelphia Fail—Man Admits Stealing $150,000.

Philadelphia.—Edwin S. Greenfield, confidential clerk and manager for Harrison Snyder & Son, brokers, was arrested, charged with the embezzlement of between $50,000 and $150,000. Greenfield made a full confession.

As a result of the defalcation a creditors' petition to have George E. Snyder, trading as Harrison Snyder & Son, adjudged an involuntary bankrupt was filed in the United States District Court.

The embezzler's peculations extended over a term of six years. Most of the stolen money was lost in bucket shops and in stock operations.

Great Lakes Strike Ended.

The strike of the longshoremen of the Great Lakes has come to an end. Work has been resumed by 20,000 men. The agreement was reached after conferences between the vessel interests and the strike leaders. The settlement means the wiping out of the Marine Union, which caused the struggle.

Citronelle is a winter and summer resort, located thirty miles north of Mobile.

Sues City of Gadsden.

Gadsden, Ala.—Mrs. Bessie Kyle Beggs, through her attorneys, Boykin & Brindley, has entered suit against the city of Gadsden for $3,000 damages, alleging damage to her property on Chestnut, between Eighth and Ninth streets. The complaint alleges that the improvements on Chestnut street are of such character that the water drained on her property was caused to stand and proved a nuisance.

Sheriff Hill Injured.

Florence, Ala.—As Sheriff O. B. Hill was driving at the corner of Tennessee and Court streets his horse became frightened at a passing car and he was thrown from his buggy and seriously injured. The animal turned suddenly, and seeing that the buggy would be upset, Sheriff Hill attempted to jump, but fell, breaking two ribs, cutting a gash in his head and injuring one arm. While his injuries are painful, they are not considered dangerous.

Preparations for Primary.

Birmingham, Ala.—Chairman J. B. Aird, of the sub-committee of the Jefferson county democratic executive committee, will probably call a meeting of his committee the latter part of this month to consider the minor details of the primary to be held in August. The general plans for the primary had already been adopted, but the lesser details are left with the subcommittee to work out.

Musgrove Talks.

Birmingham, Ala.—L. B. Musgrove, who managed the campaign of Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson in his successful race against Congressman John H. Bankhead for the democratic nomination in the Sixth district, has returned from New York, where he has been on business and also to discuss politics with the leaders in that part of the country.

Mr. Musgrove says that Hobson is a possibility for the democratic nomination for president, and that if William Jennings Bryan is not nominated at the next convention Hobson will stand an excellent chance.

United States Court.

Birmingham, Ala.—The adjourned March term of the United States circuit and district courts of the southern division of the Northern district of Alabama, Judge Thomas G. Jones presiding, commenced Monday. Judge Jones reached Birmingham Sunday.

The law and equity docket will be tried until July 1, the date of adjournment. No criminal cases will be considered at this term.

Cunningham Club.

Albertville, Ala.—At a meeting of some fifty or sixty electors of this community a Cunningham club was organized for the purpose of promoting Dr. Cunningham's candidacy for the office of governor in Marshall county.

Opening of Campaign.

Decatur, Ala.—What is regarded as the opening battle in the state senatorial campaign of this district took place at Mt. Hope, in Lawrence county, between two of the senatorial candidates, Montgomery Greenaedyke, of Lawrence county, and William T. Lowe, of Decatur. S. A. Lowe, of Decatur, who is also a candidate, was not present at the meeting.

Refuse Possession of County Convicts.

Birmingham, Ala.—Formal demand was made Saturday by George Sullivan, attorney for Mobile county, on the Sloss-Sheffield Steel and Iron Company for possession of the county convicts being worked in the mines of the company at Flat Top.

The demand was refused by M. M. Richey, first vice-president of the Sloss Company, who stated that the matter would be fought to the bitter end in the highest courts in the country if necessary.

Mr. Sullivan was accompanied by Sterling A. Wood, who has been retained as the local attorney for the Mobile county authorities. They demanded the convicts, and Mr. Richey explained the position of the company to them, saying in part:

"We will fight you to the bitter end in the highest courts in the country. We have a contract with the state and also with the county of Mobile to work these convicts at a certain price for a given length of time, and we are abiding by our side of the contract.

"We are giving the convicts the very best of treatment. We are not fighting so much for the possession of these sixteen convicts, but we are protecting the reputation of the Sloss Company in this matter. We treat the convicts well, and we intend to defend our reputation in this matter."

Aged Minister Injured.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Rev. William I. Powers, of Opelika, a superannuated minister of the M. E. Church, South, attending the general conference now in session in Birmingham, was knocked down by a street car while crossing the track at Fifty-eighth street and First avenue, Woodlawn, about 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon. He sustained a compound fracture of the left leg just above the ankle, bruises on the back and a cut on the head.

Verdict Against Haynes.

Birmingham, Ala.—After a week's investigation of the recent encounter in the Peerless saloon between Thomas G. Hewlett and Harry Haynes, which resulted in the death of Hewlett and of John T. Shugart, the coroner's jury agreed upon two verdicts, both of which charge Haynes with unlawfully firing the fatal shots. No reference was made of course by the coroner's jury to the injuries received by the three others at the time of the shooting.

Preparing Reports.

Montgomery, Ala.—Thos. E. Knight, grand chancellor of the order of Knights of Pythias in Alabama, is in the city to confer with George G. Miles, grand keeper of records and seal, concerning the reports to be made at the meeting of the grand lodge, to be held May 14 and 15 at Anniston. This meeting will show wonderful gains for the past year and for the past several years. At present the grand lodge has a fund of $17,010.64 without a dollar of liability against it. The present membership is a gain of 663 over last year, with ten new lodges for the time.

Mobile and Ohio Wreck.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—News has been received here of a rear end collision on the Mobile and Ohio railroad near the station of Elrod, on the Montgomery division. Engine 46 struck the caboose of 42. Engineer Paul O'Conner and Flagman J. W. House received painful bruises and are here under treatment. They are doing nicely and will be in a condition to resume their work within a few days.

Enlarging Library.

Montgomery, Ala.—Within the next ten days arrangements will be made for the enlarging of the capacity of the supreme court library by providing a place for overflow in the basement. Secretary of State E. R. McDavid, by direction of the capitol commission, of which he is a member, will proceed with Marshal and Librarian Junius Riggs to work out the plans and ascertain the cost of the work. Besides additional shelves in number sufficient to care for the demands, there will be other conveniences to look after.

Damaged by Frosts.

Cullman, Ala.—The frosts of Wednesday and Thursday nights did considerable damage in and around Cullman to early vegetation, and a number of strawberry farms were more or less injured. One man estimated his loss on a two-acre farm at 1,000 crates.

THE GREEN WORLD.

It's such a green and sunny world
Out where the spring things grow,
Out where the blossom-branches sway,
And where wild roses blow!
The birds are singing choruses
From every concert-tree,
And there is much that's wonderful
To smell, and hear, and see.

The sunshine plates the world with gold,
The blossoms pour out scent;
The wind plays tunes that make you dance
As if a waltz were meant.
The brook flings out caressing arms
Where ferns and mosses thrive;
It's such a green and sunny world
I'm glad to be alive!
—A. W. McCullough, in Metropolitan Magazine.

The Missing Witness

I DO not, for reasons that will become sufficiently obvious, propose to give any date in connection with the incidents I am about to relate. Nor do I bind myself to the assertion that the places I shall mention are the real ones. I will even confess that, in the case of the town upon which this statement pivots, the name has no existence, so far as I am aware, except in my imagination. The main facts, and those alone, may be taken as correct. I have my motives in making them public; which motives will, perhaps, form a subject for speculation. I am afraid that they will have to continue to do so.

I was traveling by the night express from London to Liverpool, where I proposed to embark the next day upon a steamer bound for Valparaiso. My compartment had no other occupant, and I was glad it was so, for I was restless and uneasy, moving from seat to seat, and perring continually—for no reason that I knew of—out of the carriage window into the darkness. In such a state of mind, indeed, was I that the constraint engendered by the presence of a fellow-traveler would have been well nigh unbearable.

We had been on the way a little more than an hour, and were passing a wayside station when there was a crash upon the window of my carriage; the glass was shivered to atoms and something fell upon the floor of the compartment. My nerves were strung at so high a tension that I believe I shouted aloud. For a moment I thought that I had been shot at, and sat rigid, lest by moving I should realize a hurt. Presently, recovering somewhat, I looked upon the floor, and saw that the object which had been thrown there was a small note weighted with a stone. With a feeling between curiosity and apprehension I picked it up. The indorsement in a scholarly hand did little to allay the first of these.

"For the perusal of the person or persons into whose carriage this note may be thrown."

I opened it, and the contents were of such an astonishing character that I do not think it is likely that I shall ever forget them. At present, at any rate, I can give them verbatim:

"There is a prisoner lying in the jail at Malton, sentenced to be hanged tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock. He has always protested his innocence and said that there was a man who could prove it. Though nothing was left undone to discover that man he was not found. I am he. Through illness and other causes I have only at this moment learned the circumstances—too late to telegraph, too late to communicate with the authorities at Malton in any way so that this beyond the shadow of a doubt I can prove that the accused was many miles from the scene of the murder at the time it took place. You who read this—as you value the life of a fellow-man—leave the train at Malton, go to the governor of the prison, show him this note, and say that I am coming in the morning by the earliest train. Do not fail. It is a matter of life and death. James Castlerenny."

I laid down this extraordinary document and took up the evening paper. I had read what was said about the Malton case before, but I read it again now with an added interest. After recapitulating the chief features of the murder and announcing the execution on the morrow, the report went on as follows:

"It will be remembered that the prisoner has all along vehemently protested his innocence and maintained that there exists a man, could he be found, who is able to clear him. He states that at the time of the murder he was a spectator at a football match at Clayden, where he fell into conversation with the man next to him, which culminated in a somewhat heated argument on the subject of professionalism. The prisoners' solicitors have, of course, used their best endeavors to find this person, but without success, and he is by most people regarded as a myth. The accused himself, however, does not waver from his original declaration, and it is stated that he still clings to the hope that the missing witness will appear in time to save him."

So it came about that I held this man's life in my hands. I threw the paper and the note into a corner of the carriage and did a strange thing. I laughed. Perhaps it was the strain upon my nerves; perhaps—who knows? I state the fact.

After a time, when I became more used to the situation I began to reflect. I was asked to leave the train at Malton, arouse the sleeping governor of the prison with an extraordinary story, and thereby to a certainty miss my boat to Liverpool. It was more than I was prepared to undertake. Above all things it was imperative that I should be on board the steamer which started in the morning for Valparaiso.

Besides, there was another reason which made the performance on my part of the request contained in the note a thing not to be thought of. Without doubt, it was the easiest plan to let things take their course. Could I reasonably be expected to put myself out on account of a communication which reached me in so eccentric a manner, and the authenticity of which I had no possible means of gauging? It wearied me to think. I would leave things as they were.

In this frame of mind I remained until the train had drawn up at Malton. I suppose, however, it left me not completely happy, for in a sudden impulse I threw open the window and called a porter.

"I understand," I said to him, "that there is a man in the prison here who is to be executed in the morning for murder?"

The porter seemed astonished at my question, which is perhaps not to be wondered at.

"Yes, sir," he replied at last, "there is; he killed a man at Tarby."

"Such is the general impression. It may interest you to know that he did nothing of the kind, and if you can bring to me the station master or some person in authority before the train starts again, you will probably save his life."

I believe that I enjoyed the man's look of amazement, though I had before been under the impression that the capacity to enjoy anything had passed from me. For a moment he stood regarding me with a look which I did not then understand—it has since occurred to me that he thought I was mad—then he darted away down the platform.

Though I had spoken stoically I had done so at an immense effort, to cover a state of mind of the most lively agitation. While I waited the return of my messenger I suffered a distress so extreme that I had rather go through once more the most painful portions of my racking life than endure it again. Each moment I dreaded to feel the motion of the train under me, and I held the fateful note in my hand, ready to toss upon the platform should my emissary come back too late.

At last in the dim light, I distinguished my porter among the people on the platform. He was hurrying toward me, and by his side there walked a man in top hat and frock coat, who seemed anxious above all things to preserve his dignity.

"You are the station master, I presume?" I said, when he reached me.

"No," he replied. "I am the traffic superintendent. The station master is in bed."

"No matter. You are a man, evidently, who is used to carrying responsibilities?"

He bowed stiffly.

"I am going to give you as weighty a one as you are ever likely to have. Read that." I passed him the note in my hand. "It was thrown into this carriage as we were passing a station about an hour out of London."

The superintendent held the paper beneath the light of a lamp and read it.

"How do I know this is genuine?" he said.

"So far as I am concerned you have evidence enough. You can see the broken window."

"But this other man? I may be a hoax."

"You know as much as I do. Personally I believe in it. I think the man will come."

"It would be better that you should see the governor yourself."

"It is impossible."

"May I ask why?"

"I have taken a berth on board a steamer which leaves Liverpool in the morning. It is of the utmost importance that I should catch it."

"Surely for such a cause——"

"I cannot."

The superintendent was evidently perplexed.

"You put me in a difficult position," he said.

"You mean there is the chance of saving a man's life on the one side, the chance of making a fool of yourself on the other?"

I spoke cynically. The superintendent seemed to question my right, for he looked put out.

"Do as you please," I said, coolly. "I am clear of the matter. The responsibility is now yours."

He twisted the note in his hands and for a few moments did not speak.

"Well?" I asked.

"The paper shall be handed to the governor."

The guard blew his whistle, there was the shouting of people on the platform, a snort from the engine, and I sank back upon the seat of the carriage. The train had started.

* * * * * * *

Before I sailed on the following day a telegram was received in Liverpool to say that the condemned man was reprieved. The missing witness had appeared at the last moment.

So I had saved the life of a fellow creature—and at that I drew a breath of relief. You may believe it or not, as you will. It is true.

But what of me? Shall I reach my destination in safety? What of me? What of the actual murderer? For I am that man!

THE M'KINLEY MONUMENT.

Plan of the Memorial to Be Built at Canton.

The accompanying picture shows the design accepted by the McKinley National Memorial Association for the monument to be erected at Canton, Ohio, President McKinley's home. The contract for its erection has been awarded and the association has collected $500,000 to pay all expenses of the work.

The association has purchased about twenty-five acres of land adjoining Westlawn Cemetery in the western portion of Canton, Ohio, including a mound some seventy feet in height. Upon this will be built a mausoleum of pink Milford granite, circular in form, seventy-five feet in diameter at the base, and about 100 feet in height from the foundation.

This structure will be reached by a flight of approach steps fifty feet in width, in four runs, with wide landings between, constituting a rise of fifty-five feet in all. The hill will be terraced to conform with the landings on the staircase, presenting on the whole a terraced mound surmounted by the structure proper.

At the base of the staircase will be built a plaza 200 feet in width. The main approach will be a mall about 1000 feet in length, 170 feet in width, with a waterway in the centre, and on either side a double row of trees paralleling driveways.

The jury appointed to select the architect was composed of two architects, Walter Cook, of New York, and Robert S. Peabody, of Boston, and Daniel Chester French, of New York, the sculptor. They chose the design submitted by H. Van Buren Magonigle, of New York City.

The interior of the mausoleum will be circular and finished in light gray Knoxville marble. Excepting the doorway there will be no opening but that through the crown of the dome. In the centre of this mortuary chamber will be the sarcophagi, so designed that they appear as two in one. They are cut from single blocks of polished granite. In front of the mausoleum a statue of President McKinley will stand.—New York Sun.

What Industry Did.

Thomas Shaw, the new lord advocate of London, is a self-made man. The son of a baker, he earned his living as a lawyer's clerk while attending the university. His industry was tremendous and the soundness of his scholarship may be judged from the fact that he contributed the article on Talleyrand to the Encyclopedia Britannica. He is a notable fly-fisher.

The adverse vote of Bath, England, on Carnegie's offer of $65,000 for a public library was taken by means of postal cards sent out by the City Council.

Invitations are to be issued by Belgium to other nations to send representatives to an international conference on the study of the polar regions.

An ingenious Omaha inventor has designed an entirely new fire-fighting appliance. While its use is entirely restricted to fires in building of small proportions, such as low stores and dwellings etc., the portable fire shield will, no doubt, find many advocates. It consists of a wheel truck carrying a folding fire screen of fireproof material. When collapsed the entire outfit does not take up as much room as a hook and ladder, and is drawn to the scene by horses, who are immediately detached and taken out of harm's way. The truck is then wheeled in front of the burning building and the shield raised by means of a hand gear operated by the firemen, the general plan of arrangement being apparent from an inspection of the accompanying cut. Such a portable shield would prevent the spread of the flames to adjacent property, and occasionally it might enable firemen to approach near enough to a building which was burning briskly to effect a rescue of a life or property which ordinarily would not be attempted because of the danger involved from intense heat, but from which the shield would screen the fireman.—Philadelphia Record.

Dime For Each Baby.

There is a bonus of ten cents a head on all babies born in this county. Unfortunately, however, this bonus does not go to the parents but to the physician who reports the birth.

At the last regular meeting of the city council Dr. Perkins presented a bill for fees for filing vital statistics, covering a period of two years. There was some surprise when the bill was presented, but an examination of the law showed that physicians of the city and county are allowed ten cents for each birth or death reported. The law has been in force for several years but was apparently undiscovered by the physicians until now.—Dickinson correspondence St. Paul Pioneer Press.

MAKING GOOD.

My boy, you think that all you have to do is "make a hit;"
To catch the public eye and ear, then evermore be "it;"
You think one stroke sufficient for one lifetime—may be two;
That, once a man is famous, there is nothing left to do.
I hate to wake you, sonny, from your iridescent dream,
I hate to keep your skiff from drifting any further down the stream,
But here's what I've discovered: He who's done the best he could
Is merely obligated just to keep on making good.

One little flight's a promise that you'll spread your wings and soar;
One decent job's an earnest that you'll do a thousand more;
One deed to public favor is a pledge that you will stay—
You can't do that unless you make a new mark every day.
The jump you made to wealth or fame will do less good than harm.
If by your desultory style, you prove a "false alarm."
One well-directed arrow never made a Robin Hood;
One winning stroke but binds you to the task of making good.

This world was not constructed for the lazy man of dreams;
One fleck is not a nugget—gold is constant with its gleams;
The world keeps looking higher than the level you've attained,
And thinks you retrograding till 'tis certain you have gained.
No stand-still will it tolerate; slide back, and you will see
Your name among the "has-beens" as a harmless "used-to-be."
The standard you established when you did the best you could
Was but your affidavit that you'd keep on making good.
—Strickland W. Gillilan, in Success Magazine.

The Girl Who Was Too Rich

By C. N. WILLIAMSON.

NOBODY who hasn't gone through it knows how horrid it is to be rich. I mean very rich—so rich that people say, "There goes the rich Miss Ellice" or "nice Miss Ellice," though it does seem to me I have some claim to both those descriptive adjectives, but always that detestable "rich Miss Ellice."

I was as nearly an orphan as anybody could be, for my mother died when I was a day old and my father a few months later, leaving me with those oppressive millions and no real relations (I always hated that expression, it sounds so murderous) to look after me, so I was made a ward in Chancery.

My nurse used to toady to me, and for the children I played with allowed to me several of them admitted regarding me as a kind of natural curiosity because I was "an heiress."

When I was nineteen a chaperon was engaged to live with me and travel about the world. I had longed to travel, but I soon found out it was less sad being abroad as at home.

How the facts about me leaked out somewhere I don't know, I wanted to take a false name and have a little fun, but my chaperon, who was a bishop's widow and rather rigid in her ideas, would not hear of "passing under false pretenses," as she called it. If the truth were known I believe that Mrs. De Selwyn in her quiet way enjoyed the kind of triumphal progress we made wandering about Europe.

People never failed to find us out at once. Whispers and glances went round, and mothers with sons scraped acquaintance with us and were unbearably maternal. In England and France I was fairly mobbed with impecunious young noblemen and officers, and would have been amused if I hadn't been furious. In Germany it was much the same, and in Italy I narrowly escaped being kidnaped.

When I couldn't stand it any longer we went back. It was just at the beginning of the season, and Mrs. De Selwyn was determined that I should be presented. I was presented, and the inevitable consequences ensued. In the first month I had forty-eight proposals. By the end of the season I had quite lost count, and I was so sick of it all—deadly sick, knowing only two well that not one of the men who had asked me to marry them would have dreamed of doing it if it had not been for my millions—I could have been two Duchesses—I mean, that two English Dukes were among the moths who burned their wings at the golden lamp; and there was even a lesser royalty—but it seems vulgar boasting to enumerate them; whereas, in reality, with each proposal I had one more proof of my vanity taken off, until finally I had none left at all.

Things went on in this way, growing worse instead of better, for two years. I felt old and had lost my faith in the disinterestedness of men and women. I was not intended by nature to be cynical, but experience was exerting pressure, and the people who called themselves so charming must have disliked me intensely, for I was starving for love—honest love without the sus-picion of a mercenary twist.

When I was twenty-one, and free—as much as a girl can be free—to do as I chose, Mrs. De Selwyn and I had a quarrel. It was a silly quarrel about an equally silly young man, my chaperon's nephew, whom she'd been scheming for, for years, it seemed, to have me marry. I was so disgusted that I threw over a lot of country-house engagements and rushed off to the only person whose love I had ever been moved to be for myself and not for my money.

She was a dear old proud thing who wrote love stories for magazines, and had refused to accept a penny from me when she was threatened with consumption and had been sent away to Judson, a small Florida coast place, to live. She had taken a tiny cottage, for which she paid more in a year than I spent for nothing at all in a week. But she loved her room, and wrote there all the time, and kept me for as long as I liked to stay. Her name was Mrs. Pendennis. I knew that we had got acquainted through my writing, in care of her editor, to tell her how much I loved a story of hers.

She did me good because she never flattered, but scolded me instead for being cynical. She said it was a "mental dyspepsia," and while I lived with her I almost believed it was.

I hadn't been in Judson for a week when one day I came in from a walk and exclaimed, "Well, it's begun!"

"What has begun?" inquired my dear old friend, looking up from a love scene which was meant to make the public shed tears.

"The usual thing," said I. "A man has come. I am not conceited, but there are signs, and I'm sure he is one of them."

She knew what I meant without asking, and merely sat still with a mild smile as I related the incident which occurred.

Circumstantial evidence was with me, for men were out of season in Judson. I had been the only stranger. Now, within a week of my advent, there was another—a male stranger, a gentleman to the eye and ear, well dressed (but not too well dressed), staying at a hotel which offered no inducements at this time of year to his kind. I had seen him come out of the inn, and instinct told me that I was the inducement. Who the man was I could not guess, but I was sadly sure that he more than guessed who I was. Somehow my secret had been betrayed, and he—no doubt of the army of impecunious unattached ones—had stalked me to my lair. My hat had blown off, he had run after it, picked it up and handed it back with a bow and a murmured word.

To be sure he had not followed up his advantage, but I was certain that this was only his cleverness, and that he would be more pushing next time. I was so hatefully experienced in that kind of thing—I knew all the phases.

Mrs. Pendennis tried to cheer me up, but I had seen the speck in my garnered fruit, and it was a big speck, at least six feet tall and broad in proportion. One couldn't forget it, especially as to a less sophisticated mind it might have appeared exceedingly good to look upon.

Next day I met him again, or rather he met me. But to my surprise, instead of taking off his cap and smiling and making the most of yesterday's acquaintance, he glared and plunged round the first corner. Could this be a new kind of tactics? I asked myself. Could it be that he wished to rouse interest by piquing curiosity?

I smiled with scorn at the thought and determined to show the man at the first opportunity how futile were his subtleties. Still, if it were his object to make me think of him, I confess that to a certain extent he succeeded, for it was a novelty to be glared at by a man, and the picture of the big, brown, frowning fellow lingered in my mind.

That evening my opportunity came. My afternoon walks had usually to be taken alone, as Mrs. Pendennis' working days were long. I was strolling by the sea at the sweet hour when the east is misty silver with the rising of the moon, the west fading pink with the setting of the sun. There he was, presumably lying in wait, so I glared, and, turning round, marched away. But something seemed to force me to glance back—just a fleeting glance, yet long enough to see that the man was striding off in the opposite direction. So far had he gone already that I was afraid he must have missed my protest.

For an entire week we kept it up. There were not many different walks to take, so it need not have been surprising that we almost invariably met. But as invariably we turned upon our tracks and—often met again. I could not help wondering who he was and all about him, and whether, after all, he really was one of them.

After a whole fortnight I came in from a walk one day to find Mrs. Pendennis nervous and embarrassed. "I've a confession to make, dear," she said at dinner. "Do forgive me, but—I've let it out to the rector's wife—she called while you were out—who you really are. I'm afraid she's rather a gossip, and probable half Judson knows by this time."

"If by half Judson you mean the man," I retorted, "it doesn't much matter, for if he came for the purpose we suspect, he must have known all along."

"Don't say 'we suspect,' Margot. I don't suspect."

"You did. You know you did. If you don't know now it must be because you've found out something."

"Well, I told you the dear rector's wife was inclined to gossip, and her husband is an old acquaintance of the man's. That, she says, is what brought the man here. He wanted to find the quietest, most secluded spot in America, and he thought of his friend's description of Judson."

"Why did he want a retired spot? Is he an escaped convict?"

"No. But his name is John Drayton."

"My goodness! Not the South American millionaire?"

"Yes, dear. So it seems."

"Why, he's got as much money as I have—more, perhaps."

"That was his reason for wanting seclusion. You see, people made such a fuss about him when he first came back from South America. Girls behaved rather foolishly, and he——"

"O, what fun. He ran away from them, too, and supposed that I was one of them, just as I've been supposing about him."

"Likely. But if the rector's wife has repeated what I was indiscreet enough to let out——"

"Then he knows by this time. I wonder——" But I didn't finish my sentence. I was wondering whether if we happened to meet in the morning he would avoid me again.

We did happen to meet. I dropped a book—quite accidentally, of course. It fell into the water and he fished it out and gave it to me. He didn't glare, neither did I. It was no longer worth the trouble. Somehow we talked and we liked the same things. Besides, the common sorrow of being rich drew us together. I had never met a young unmarried millionaire before, and being with one was wonderfully restful. By and by it got to seem the nicest thing in the world.

When he told me that I was the prettiest, sweetest girl he had ever seen I believed it, for he had nothing to gain by flattery. When he told me that he loved me I believed that, too, for he had twice as much money as he wanted, and the addition of mine would be a bore. He only liked me in spite of it. I believed him and he believed me, and together we made the remarkable discovery of how to be happy though rich.—St. Louis Star.

SHIELDS FOR SOLDIERS.

German Military Writer Advocates Their Use by Infantry.

A writer in the Militar-Wochenblatt raises anew the question of the use of portable shields for the protection of infantry in the attack, says Broad Arrow. He writes approvingly of the Japanese spade work in the offensive, the more so because he mentions incidentally, as a matter regarding which there can be no dispute, that the German authorities have long since advocated the use of artificial cover in the attack, and points out that when the ground was frozen or rocky, and the spade could make no impression upon it, the attacking Japanese infantry not infrequently went forward, carrying with them filled sandbags weighing as much as forty pounds. He remarks that if the undoubtedly brave Japanese soldier found it necessary to load himself with so bulky and burdensome a protection when advancing in the open against an intrenched enemy it would seem far better to equip the infantry with a light, handy shield. Furnished with a handle by which to carry it, a loophole to fire through and some arrangement to prevent its falling down, the infantryman would then find himself, like his gunner comrade, protected by a bullet-proof shield. The writer in the Wochenblatt suggests that on the march the shield should be carried on the back, when going into action on the chest and when advancing to the attack in the left hand, so as to be at once available for use when lying down to fire, both as head cover and rifle rest.

Skim Milk Paint.

The Scientific American, in commending skim milk for painting, gives the following directions for making it and some results from its use. It says:

"Stir into a gallon of milk about three pounds of Portland cement and add sufficient Venetian red paint powder to impart a good color. Any other colored paint powder may as well be used. The milk will hold the paint in suspension, but the cement, being heavy, will sink to the bottom, so that it becomes necessary to keep the mixture well stirred with a paddle. Mix only enough at a time for one day's use. Six hours after painting this paint will be as immovable and unaffected by water as a month-old paint. Cases are on record of this sort of paint being in good condition after twenty years, and it has preserved the wood admirably. The addition of carbolic acid or some other disinfectant makes it very suitable for dairy work, as it then has a cleansing effect.

Why She Wanted Park Lane.

A lady carrying a little dog got into an omnibus and wanted to know if every turning was Park Lane.

She began asking the question at Putney, says the London Chronicle, and repeated it at intervals all along the route until at last she was told, to the intense relief of everybody in the omnibus that Park Lane was really before her eyes.

But they were not to see the last of her even then. "Look!" she said in ecstatic tones, holding up the dog to the window, "that's where your mother was born!"

The "Poor Man's Oyster."

A dish of snails is hardly ever seen in England, says the London Lancet, although in Spain and in France this mollusk is a fairly common article of food among the poor. The snail has been called "the poor man's oyster," though we do not remember to have seen it eaten raw. We know, however, that it makes an excellent fish sauce, and may be used for the same purpose as oyster sauce.

The Girl Who Hopes Must Also Be Punctual

To Be Successful

By Beatrice Fairfax.

ARE you punctual?

If not you will never amount to anything.

Not only does the unpunctual person live in a state of turmoil and discomfort herself—she also keeps every one else disturbed and inconvenienced.

She is late for every engagement and lives in a constant state of flurry and hurry.

She begins the day by being late for breakfast and never makes up for the time lost.

The time wasted during the year by an unpunctual person is deplorable.

Lack of system is the root of the trouble.

Nothing is in its place, and there is no regular time for performing any duty.

If you are in business and want to succeed you must be punctual to the minute.

When you are late in keeping an appointment you not only waste your own time, but that of the person waiting for you also. It is a double offense.

If you live on One Hunded and Twenty-fifth street and have to be on Twentyy-third street at 2 o'clock you can't be on time if you leave home at five minutes of 2.

When you have an engagement to keep begin to get ready in good time; don't start dressing at the moment you should be leaving the house.

Nothing is more annoying to a punctual person than having to wait for one who is unpunctual.

If you are invited out to dinner and arrive half an hour late you entirely spoil the dinner and the pleasure of your hostess in seeing you.

Begin the day by being on time for breakfast. Get up early enough to allow yourself sufficient time to dress.

And all through the day order your work so as to be able to punctually meet all your engagements.

It simplifies things wonderfully if they are done at the right time.

But if you leave everything half-finished because you have not allowed yourself proper time to do it in you will be in a sad muddle by the end of the day.

Keep a level head and do your work calmly and systematically.

Flurry spoils everything.

Don't think you can save time by doing things in a slipshod, slovenly manner. Half the time the work has to be done over again, and there is great loss of time and energy.

A proper appreciation of time and its value will help you wonderfully with your day's work.

As far as you are able have a stated time for every duty.

Be prompt in keeping engagements; have some regard for other people's time if you have none for your own.

If you have any ambition to make a success of yourself remember that you positively must be punctual in everything.

"Ye of Little Faith."

By Graham Hood.

THE faith that might move mountains has been exhibited in this world in a hundred different ways during the past century. Always, however, it has performed more useful services, all of which stands forth today as magnificent samples of what faith can do in the way of inspiring mankind to accomplish great deeds.

If he has perfect faith in his own capacity and a similar degree of faith in the project in which he is about to engage there is practically nothing that man cannot hope to achieve. He has aimed high in the past, but as he has pierced the bull's-eye straight through the centre he cannot have aimed too high. In fact, if the past is any criterion, there is no point so high that man may not aspire to reach it. To attain this, however, one must have a goodly store of ambition, and ambition without faith is impossible. He must have faith in himself—faith to believe that he can actually accomplish anything that he sets out to do; and he must have faith in his purpose—faith to believe that it is the one thing in the world that it is best for him to do.

History is filled with personal examples of the truth of this statement. One has only to turn its pages to find many stories of men who have accomplished great deeds with no other incentive than absolute faith in themselves. Napoleon stands out as one example. A Corsican lieutenant in the French army, he made himself emperor of France and just failed of becoming master of Europe. When he graduated from the military school anybody would have said that such an ambition was beyond all bounds of reason. Napoleon did not find it an impossible ambition, and he might have gone on soaring to still greater heights if Waterloo and an attack of indigestion had not occurred on the same day.

Napoleon is not the only example in history, however, even if he is one of the most striking. There are many other illustrations, some of men who maintained their greatness until they died, but all of them teach us the same lesson. They show that we are masters of our own destiny; that we can make of ourselves whatever we will; that ambition and steadfastness of purpose represent the material from which we must build success as we are to attain in this life, and that faith is the corner stone without which it is impossible for us to erect anything like a permanent structure.—New York Globe.

The Old and New Education

By President Hadley, of Yale.

THE old curriculum was a sort of initiation into a learned society. Euclid was the ladder up which the candidates climbed, Greek the blanket in which they were tossed. If they had good luck and passed through the preliminary stages successfully, the ability to quote Latin more or less correctly was the badge of full membership. From the ritual of this society, as is the case with every other ritual, some of the candidates got much benefit, some got little, some got none. * * * * The really valuable thing was not the discipline, but the life of which that discipline was a condition and an incident; not the initiation, but the society itself; not the ritual of the society, but the purpose by which that society was animated. The old college, with its faults, was a place where private aims were subordinated to public ones in a way that would have been impossible in any purely technical or professional school; a place where each man felt an intense interest in the work of his fellows; a place which had the spirit of true democracy and formed the truest kind of preparation for American citizenship.

Whether we will or no, we are bound to provide undergraduate courses of study which appeal to the taste and temperament of different men. But I believe that, in spite of all these changes, we can emphasize the public purpose in our college life and college training as the essential thing and treat the general culture as an incident. I go further and say that because of these very changes we must emphasize this public purpose even more than before.

With the diversity of studies and pursuits introduced under the new system, combined with the inequalities of property and diversities of habit due to the growth of wealth throughout the country, there is some danger that college life will lose the close coherence which it had of old, and that individual culture rather than public service may become its dominant aim.

The Lynx-eyed Spies of Russia

By Vance Thompson.

RUSSIA is preeminently the land of spies. Democratic and socialistic France has raised the spy-system to a state function, but in Russia it is the very soul of the state. In Moscow, in the streets, agents of the police are stationed every five hundred yards; in addition, secret agents watch the houses day and night—one being allotted to every four houses; and in every house is another spy, the porter. Go where you will, you are never out of the watchful eye of the police. You brush against spies in your hotel, as in the theatres; in a restaurant, as in the drawing-room of a friend. It is ridiculously easy to recognize those you meet in the fashionable resorts. They have evidently been instructed to disguise themselves as gentlemen, and for one of them the livery of a gentleman is a frock coat, a silk hat, and, always—by rain or sunlight—an umbrella. The famous third police! A stranger might fancy that, in an open cab—talking French or English to his friend—he would at least be safe from surveillance; but his friend will touch him significantly and speak of the weather. The fat cabby on the box, somnolent, with white hair and good paternal eyes, may be a spy, more skilled in the language than the traveling stranger; and if the cabman has been found loitering near the great clubs, the hotels, or the embassies, the chances are strong that he is. A subtler police than that of the third section—the okrang, which has its ramifications in every capital in Europe and America—completes this great system of espionnage. Its mesh is over every man in Russia; no one goes unwatched Ksave only old Count Tolstoi.—Success.

DEAFNESS IN STAMMERERS.

Elocution Teacher Says the One Almost Accompanies the Other.

A woman elocution teacher in this city has developed an interesting theory concerning the more or less common affliction of stammering. This, she claims is due, not to the enlarged palate, defect in certain muscles and other causes to which physicians and specialists usually attribute it, but simply and entirely to incorrect breathing.

"In the course of my professional engagements," she says, "I have come into contact with a large number of persons afflicted either slightly or to a distressing degree with stammering. I began by dint of questions and examination to discover their methods of respiration. In every case that has so far come under my observation this has proved to be a difficult and laborious process, drawing upon wrong sources, calling wrong muscles into play, and actually choking up the avenues through which the natural voice should come. I have made some experiments in a purely non-professional way through interest in the subject—for stammering is out of my province—and I find that even a little instruction in correct respiration methods is beneficial and has immediate effect for good upon the subject.

"Another thing! Have you ever noticed how commonly the stammerer is afflicted with deafness? It is almost rare to find a subject who does not labor under this second malady as well. In fact, every stammerer may consider himself, unless cured within a reasonable time, as a sure victim of the dreaded deafness. He uses the vocal apparatus incorrectly, and loss of hearing is the almost inevitable penalty.

"Most of the subjects examined in my experiments were men, for the simple reason, I suppose, that men stammerers are to the women afflicted in this way in the proportion of fifty to one, if not more. Women do, of course, stammer, but few and usually in less serious cases than those of the men."—New York Press.

Windsor Castle Repaired.

King Edward is having the royal library at Windsor Castle subjected to a most thorough overhauling, the first one of the kind in ages, and all sorts of treasures are being brought to light. Thus the ten missing pages of the celebrated French translation of Flavius Josephus' "History of Jewish Antiquities," which is one of the gems of the National Library of France, at Paris, has been brought to light by King Edward's new librarian, the Hon. John Fortescue. The work in question belonged to the Duke de Berry, brother of King Charles V. of France, and afterwards passed into the hands of Jacques D'Armagnac, who was beheaded by King Louis XI. The ten pages have been missing ever since the book has been in the National Library of France—that is to say, for hundreds of years. How they found their way into the royal library at Windsor Castle, where they have been for considerably more than a century, nobody seems to know. King Edward, on learning of their discovery, immediately took steps to present them to the National Library of France, and they have now been restored to the precious volume from which they were cut hundreds of years ago. Many duplicates of valuable etchings and engravings are also being found in the Windsor library by John Fortescue, and these, by King Edward's direction, are being sold in London, the large sums of money thus obtained being devoted, it is said, to the acquisition of new treasures for the library at Windsor Castle.—Marquise de Fontenoy, in the Washington Post.

Origin of Thermal Springs.

Before the French Academy of Medicine there has been laid a theory of the world's hot springs, which, besides being novel, is considered by French scientific men to be probably true. The accepted theory up to the present has been that these springs come from rain water that has been infiltrated to great depths, acquiring mineral properties by contact with the rock strata through which it has passed. Professor Armand Gautier declares that the water is nothing less than the distilled essence of the rocks themselves. To test his theory by practice, he subjected rock to the process of destructive distillation, obtaining from 1000 cubic yards of granite the almost incredibly yield of 23,000,000 to 26,000,000 cubic yards of water. He thence concludes that the central heat of the earth, which is about equal to 8000 atmospheres, literally distills the rocks coming within its terrific power, and that the water rising to the surface acquires its bi-carbonates, its marine soda, and its sulphurates from the strata through which it scalds its way.

Building Wreckers.

Perhaps no band of men in the world suffered such constant injuries, if not death, as the corps of building wreckers to be found in every large city. They visit a building which has been gutted by fire, the tottering walls of which are still standing, and which accordingly are a menace to pedestrians. It is the business of these wreckers to pull the walls down, and a half hour spent watching them at this work brings the quick thrill as nothing else in our humdrum urban civilization can. They swarm over the swaying walls with reckless impunity, fastening ropes here and there, preparing for the long and strong pull. Frequently the walls go in simply because of the weight of the men at work upon them. The bodies are dug out of the mass of iron and brick, and the work goes on as if nothing had happened.—Technical World.

AN APOLOGY.

We apologize for the letters, etc., left out this week, but it could not be helped. You see, Tax Collector Hubbard in his very laudable desire to be (as usual) one of the first collectors to make his final report to the State Auditor, wanted to get the tax sale notice in this week's Union, but after all found it impossible. The list of property for sale will appear next week. We wanted to say something about the very harmonious meeting of the Republicans and Populists last Saturday, but will give it to you later. There will be an address issued later, also. It was proposed to the conference of Populists and Republicans that preceded the executive sessions of the two committees that the meeting endorse W. W. Wadsworth for State Senator. His name received almost unanimous favor, but it was decided to let the people name their choice in the primary, the date of which will be announced later. The gathering, which numbered about 200, was a very representative body, being from all parts of our county, and shows that the People's Ticket will have one of the old-time majorities in November.

CANE CREEK.

THE NEXT AUDITOR.

Hon. Horace Hood, of Montgomery, editor of the Montgomery Evening Journal, candidate for State Auditor and an all around good man, was in Clanton Monday. If we can't elect a Republican Auditor we are grateful to the Democracy for giving us such a good man, for he is sure one of the best they have in their ranks. Here's success to you, Auditor Hood.

ALL DAY SINGING.

Editor Union:

Please announce in your paper that the annual May singing is to meet again the fourth Sunday (27th) at 9 o'clock a. m. at Salem. Everybody come and bring your song books and your baskets—not for a picnic, as it is called by some (who are interested in the eating part only), but to a singing for the sole purpose of hymning praises unto the great high God.

Puts Turk In Balance.

London.—No uneasiness is felt here regarding the outcome of the ultimatum sent by Great Britain to Turkey demanding the evacuation of Tabah by Turkish troops. It is believed the sultan will back down at the last moment and will withdraw his troops from the disputed territory. In case of Turkey's failure to do this England will seize several Turkish ports and hold them until the sultan comes to terms.

Southern Publishers in Montgomery.

Montgomery, Ala.—The Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association met in Montgomery Tuesday morning with a large attendance. The business meetings were held in the New Exchange Hotel. An elaborate program for the entertainment of the newspaper men and other visitors upon the sessions was arranged by the Montgomery Commercial Club. An old-fashioned southern barbecue was given at Jackson's Lake Tuesday afternoon.

CLANTON.

Editor Union:

Now that the wheels of the political machine have been put into motion in our county we must look out, else strife, prejudice and division will creep into our midst and lo! we will have a moss-covered Democrat in our law-making body at our historic capitol; and then, again, any party must stand solidly together to attain their aims. Also every party must have an organ or newspaper in which to express their views and sentiments in its columns, and no paper can be run on wind and good wishes. Therefore we must rally to the support of OUR paper, The Union, and every TRUE Populist and Republican in Chilton county should be a subscriber to it and thereby aid the paper financially. Our editor has been loyal to our cause, stood firm and true under severe criticism and slurs from our enemies (both open and secret ones), but in the face of all this malicious opposition he has never wavered from the path of duty, and for that reason he is to be commended and should have the hearty support of all TRUE men in Chilton county who are "for the right" in political affairs. Our county is in fine shape, financially speaking, and the officials elected by our party are directly the cause of this happy state of affairs; and then we have as low a rate of taxation as any county in the State (and much lower than the majority of them). The good men elected by the good people of this county are responsible for this fine record, and we must elect only such men as will maintain it. I hear that several prominent men in the Democratic party are going to run for representative, and we must see that their nominee runs far behind in the general wind-up, as we'd better have a "Hill Billy" Populist or Republican in the Legislature than a "mossback" Democrat. So let us all take The Union without regard to our personal likes or dislikes, for a party without a paper is like a hunter without a gun; they are "N. G." LEANDER.

CENTER HILL.

Editor Union:

Hello! Union readers, here I am again. Health here is fairly good, and farmers are chopping cotton, though these cold nights are making cotton look real sick. Say, boys, some folks say the union boys can't do anything. Now, let's show them the contrary. You know some of these Democrats say that the Populists and Republicans are dead. Now, boys, let's show them that there is a judgment day for them unless they turn. The Good Book says, "If you love me, keep my commandments; come on, follow me." Good luck to The Union.

PECK'S BAD BOY.

WEST CHILTON.

Mr. Editor:

Health is good here; so is the weather, and people are moving right along with their work. The cold nights sure did make cotton look bad. There is going to be a heap of May cotton this spring. The best cotton I ever made was planted May 10. Mrs. Viola Littlejohn, of Vick, is visiting T. J. Littlejohn's this week. W. G. is still coming down the road; so look out, judge. W. E. Thomas was a visitor here last week. To "Just a Voter:" Come on, brother; I want to hear your big gun. J. L. Thomas and daughter, Julia, were visitors of H. Honeycutt's Saturday. We were all glad to see them, and say come again. Success to The Union. Yours for the best.

LITTLE J.

NORTHEAST BESSIE.

The Sun-Beam Band met at Mars Hill Sunday evening and went through in due form. Brothers of the F. E. & C. U. of A., let's keep on the road to prosperity, and don't let's try to pull any one else down, but build ourselves up as high as we can. Those are my principles, and I am a strong union man. There was a nice musical entertainment at Mr. Cofer's Saturday night. Miss Dora Langston was a visitor of Miss Leny Cofer's Sunday. We congratulate the writer from South Bessie. He has good sound sense in his letters. We'd like to hear from "Just a Voter" again. What's wrong about Center Point? Come more often. S. W. L. N. B. Posey, of South Bessie, is a grand juryman; so, boys, you had all better look, for he is sharp. Success to The Union. SAP-HEAD.

SOUTH BESSIE.

Hurrah for the "Old Man" and "Reformer" of Mars Hill. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Sorrell and Misses Maude and Berta Waldrup visited Mrs. Delphia Horton in Beat 2 Saturday. Judge Reynolds has vindicated himself admirably relative to the convicts. Nothing like being right. Ah, those little flings. When will some people ever quit resorting to them. We are pleased to note The Union's freedom from such things; also its high literary character is quite commendable. Allen Mahan went to New Prospect Sunday. Misses Lily Pate and Omer Smith went to Free Springs Sunday. It seems that many of The Union's readers are musically inclined. Sacred music is quite elevating. Our very old people can remember with pleasure the compositions of B. F. White and E. J. King, along with the noble work of Hastings and Mason. Modern composers are abundant. Some of them are good, such as Showalter, Kiefer, Warren, Picket, Knapp, Warner, Hoffman and many others while the sweetest compositions we think we ever heard are those of D. O. Teasly. Democracy has been offered to the American people for a long time and as they have never yet regarded it as important in their business career, they probably never will. No, never. Give us progress, liberty and truth. Wishing success to the people and The Union, I am still

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

PLEASANT GROVE.

Dear Editor:

As it has been some time since I have contributed anything to your columns I will give you a few dots. First, I will say that the singing at this place on Sunday evening last was a perfect success. The class was led by James Franklin and Archie Glasscock. We were glad to see so many visitors from different places, viz: Jemison, Mars Hill, Macedonia, Mulberry and Pleasant Hill; and amongst our welcome visitors was Miss Lizzie Lowery. Her presence made many hearts beat glad, for Miss Lizzie has a host of friends at this place. A certain writer signs himself a "Lover of Music," and many of us could do that, for there is no heart immune to the charms of music. Indeed there is scarcely one the world over that is not a lover of its sweet strains. Moreover almost every heart sometimes, somehow, gives response to the vibrating chords of sacred song. It's a universal language of the soul. Music is universally appreciated and practiced. The English plow boy sings as he drives his team; the Scotch Highlander makes the glens and gray moors resound with his beautiful song; the muleteer of Spain cares little who is on the throne or behind it if he can only have his early carol; the vintager of Sicily has his evening hymn, even beside the burning mount; the fisherman of Naples has his boat song, to which his rocking boat beats time on that beautiful sea, and the gondolier of Venice still keeps up his midnight serenade. And so the world, employing the divine art, is one great organ, a mighty chorus, ever giving praise to Him who put this joy in every heart. Why should your lips or mine be sealed? He who sings leads a happy life. We sing when we are happiest, and are happiest when we sing. Well, I guess I had better blow off for this time, as methinks I can hear the editor breathe a sigh and look around for the waste basket. If this escapes the dreaded basket I'll give you more along line another time.

UNCLE NED.

THORSBY.

Mesdames Hartlins and Olson made a trip to Clanton last week. Mrs. Carlson entertained the Swedish Ladies' Aid last Thursday. Confirmation services were held at the Swedish Church Sunday. Those confirmed in English were Mabel Johnson, Ida Anderson, Ray Thorson and Carl Peterson; in the Swedish language, Esther Carlson and Charlott Turnquist. Mrs. Thorson and family and Mr. and Mrs. Lonnie Reagan, of Calera, visited with relatives here over Sunday. Last Saturday's ball game was in Clanton's favor. The score was 6 to 7. The Clanton ball team will play here Friday afternoon. Mrs. James Bosworth, of Birmingham, spent Sunday in Thorsby. Littleton Smith is home for a visit. A carload of peach crates was unloaded here Tuesday. Every one is invited to attend the Baptist Ladies' Aid at Mrs. Tom Robinson's next Tuesday. Cake and coffee will be served. Misses Lucas, Ericson, Paulson, Hanson, Duggan and Hawthorne took in the ball game at Clanton Saturday. Mrs. Aldrich returned to her home in Birmingham Monday evening. Mesdames Howell and Harps, of Jemison, were in town Monday and Tuesday. Miss Lee Robinson has been quite ill. We are glad to hear she is improving. Messrs. A. Horn and E. W. Lane is the father of Dr. Lane, formerly of Montevallo. Misses Ella and Sue Simpson left for Birmingham Wednesday for a visit with relatives. "ANON."

CEDAR GROVE.

Editor Union:

Because I've been still for some time is no sign that I've quit writing. I just hadn't any news. I notice "Farm Boy" is uneasy about "Toby," but he can see from this that I'm still kicking. This inquiry about me made me think about a story I once heard. "There was an old preacher who had preached for forty years, without making a single convert in that time; so he decided to quit preaching, as he didn't seem to be doing any good. So he quit, and some time after he was attending a protracted meeting, where they received one member who in relating his religious experience said he was converted under the sound of this old preacher's voice. The old man got up and said, 'Thank God, I've save one soul in forty years; now I'm ready for forty more.'" That's me; if one man has read my poor remarks, I'm ready to write again. Politics is hardly hot enough yet to be interesting. When you see a man wearing a derby hat it sometimes means that he would like to represent Chilton in the Legislature; so look out for the derby hats. Our crops are looking bad on account of the unseasonably cold weather. Well, I'll stop this time by asking every man that does not take The Union to subscribe at once.

TOBY.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

The farmers here are ready to chop cotton if they had any to chop, but there isn't a third of a stand in these parts. Rev. S. Smitherman preached to a large congregation here Sunday night. Sid Weldon was a welcome visitor in these parts Sunday. R. C. Riggins visited in this community Sunday. I wonder what has become of the writer from Pletcher. We all enjoyed his letter very much, as there are a number around that place that we have spent many happy hours with, though some have passed to the great beyond. A number of our young people attended preaching at New Salem Sunday, and report a nice time. I hope all the correspondents will come in this week, as I think it is a grand, good thing to hear from our friends all over the county through your paper. I wouldn't be without The Union for a good deal. Success to the dear old Union and its many readers.

JUST A SUBSCRIBER.

HAPPY HOLLOW.

M. H. Parker and Jim Price, with their best company, attended services at Walnut Creek Sunday, and report a nice time. We are having a lot of sickness in our community at present. Rev. S. Smitherman spent Saturday night at Shaw Mims'. R. H. Bean and wife visited the latter's parents Sunday, accompanied by their little daughter, Ivory. Look out, Judge Reynolds, for from the way M. H. is riding out you will soon have work to do.

SHORTY'S PET.

BETHANY.

Mr. Editor:

It's been some time since I've said anything. Health of our community is fairly good at present, and our Sunday school is doing well. Rev. S. Smitherman filled his regular appointment at New Salem Sunday and had a large and attentive congregation. Miss Ola Burnett visited Mrs. F. J. Parker last Friday. Bob Hardy,, of Birmingham, visited his parents here last week. He can't give up his old home. Bob Smith visited relatives at Thorsby last week. Harvey Wilson and wife returned to their home at Pratt City Sunday last. Mrs. Maud Gill, of Pratt City, is visiting her uncle, Jack Parker, at Jackson's Chapel. The candy-breaking at Tom Burnett's Saturday night was a success. "Shorty's Pet" is mistaken about Terrell Bussie making his visit on last Sunday. He got his mule as far as the gate, and it gave out on him. M. H. Parker didn't get his ticket punch this Sunday, as he went to Walnut Creek Church. With good wishes to The Union and its many readers, MISS LOGWOOD.

CANE CREEK.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words for the first time. The Sunday school is progressing nicely at this place. We have Sunday school every Sunday, and preaching days are changed back to the fourth Sunday and Saturday before. Well, the farmers are wishing for rain again. Some of the farmers are done chopping cotton, and some haven't got none up yet. Well, being it is the first time, I will close. Yours truly,

"DO YOU KNOW."

ROCK MOUNT.

There will be a public working for the purpose of fencing the cemetery at this place on Saturday, May 26, beginning at 7:30 a. m. Everybody that's interested will please be on hand.

Bank Your Saving's With a Safe Bank.

Every man, woman and child, no matter where they live, should have a savings account with the Citizens' Savings Bank of Birmingham, for the following reasons:

It is the only bank of importance in the state which confines its banking business strictly to savings accounts and does no commercial business. The banking laws of Alabama provide that where a bank doing both a savings and general banking business becomes insolvent, the depositors who have accumulated for interest (commercial) will have preference over those who had their money in the bank for savings—in other words, the savings depositors can't be paid a cent until the commercial depositors have been paid in full.

We take no trade risks; all our loans are made on first class improved real estate mortgages or other gilt-edge collateral security—our motto being "The strength of a bank is in its individual loans."

These things, backed up by our cash capital and responsibility of our board of directors and the long and successful experiences of our officers in the banking business, render our bank as safe as United States bonds.

Bank with us by mail. It is easy and safe. Write for information.

Office hours from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. every day.

CLANTON BEATS THORSBY.

After ten innings of exciting playing the home boys won the ball game from Thorsby here Saturday evening by a score of 7 to 6. The two teams were about evenly matched, and the game was greatly enjoyed by the large crowd present. Headley's two-base drive, followed by McDowell's usual single, broke up the game, with Clanton the winner. The Clanton team played well, considering the fact that they have had very little practice and that some of the boys played positions entirely new to them. Heath Jones played at short, and while his work was bad, the position was one he had never played before, and he did enough at the bat to redeem himself. J. E. Robinson played right field instead of second base, and did better than ususal. Papy Giles cut his usual didoes and shines on first base, and did very well. The best work was done by Joe Headley. He caught and pitched and batted fine. The next game will be played Friday evening at Thorsby, and a good game is sure. The Thorsby boys are a nice set of young men and seem to be willing to do anything that is fair. "B. B."

The quiet and unobtrusive life of farmers, leads often to what the Indiana Farmer calls "the mistaken idea," held by city people, that the influence of the agriculturist upon the social and business interests of our country is very slight. Let those who hold this opinion reflect that the farmer feeds and clothes the world, and from the farm come the best men in the business and political life of our land. The lessons on the farm of labor, economy, independence and honesty, in the formative period of character, have been the secret of success of many of our merchant princes and notable statesmen. That the influence of the farm is felt in numerous ways in all walks of life is not to be disputed. It is the one profession which all others must honor for its power and solidarity.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING

About 70,000 elephants are annually killed in Africa by ivory hunters.

Apples contain a small quantity of sulphur, which adds much to their medicinal value.

The Czar's eldest daughter has one of the finest collections of penny toys in the world, which have been sent to her from Paris, London and Berlin.

Chinchillas have been so much in request for furs in the last few years that the species is in danger of extinction in Chile and Bolivia.

Lovers of flowers will be interested to know that a new orchid was recently sold in London for $6035. The orchid is the Odontoglossum crispum pittanum.

Sir John Sinclair, a Scottish baronet, has presented gramophones and records to three hundred asylums and other institutions on condition that they are played to the inmates for half an hour every day.

The antiquity of Chinese civilization may be inferred from the fact that at the present day there are in circulation coins which were minted three hundred years before the Christian era, and bearing likenesses of emperors who reigned in those days.

A dredger built of oak, sixty-eight feet long, twenty-one feet wide, and drawing seven feet six inches of water, is now in use in Dundee harbor. It has been in use in the same place for over 100 years, and the engine is said to have been built by James Watt.

Near London there is a hospital where the patients live exclusively on a fruit diet and where in three years there have been only two deaths among five hundred patients. The institution rejoices in the name of the Lady Margaret Fruitarian Hospital.

Nine one-armed men, business men of Lock Haven, Penn., gathered at a banquet the other evening. After dinner they sat back with their cigars, and related in turn how they came to lose their arms. Railroads were responsible for three, the threshing machine for three, gun accidents for two and war one.

At Worcester, England, the slab erected over a departed auctioneer is inscribed with a single word, "Gone." In Sussex the initials and date of the death of the deceased are followed by two words, "He was." The most remarkable inscription is at Cane Hill Cemetery, Belfast, where the inscription says, "Left till called for."

MECHANICAL TRENCH DIGGING.

Traction Ditching Machine Well Thought of by Contractors.

Mechanical trench excavators are beginning to be recognized by the general contractor as having passed the experimental stage, and reliable engineers are now willing to admit for their limited class of work that they can dig as cheaply as any other mechanical system of excavating, not excluding hydraulic dredges or steam shovels.

The Engineering Record contains an account of the operations of a traction ditching machine working on a sewer trench in stiff clay. The outfit costs $4000 to install, and notwithstanding the payment of very high wages to the operators, the excation was being done for 3½ cents per cubic yard, including all expenses except depreciation and interest. In digging a trench twenty-six inches wide by seven feet deep, in tough clay, the traction engine was geared to travel forward at a speed of two feet per minute. If kept up without interruption for ten hours this would mean 1200 lineal feet of seven foot trench per day, but allowing for adjustments and incidental stoppages an average of 900 feet per day was actually accomplished.

The machine consists essentially of a large wheel, to the circumference of which a series of digging buckets are rigidly attached. The wheel is supported by I-beams projecting from the rear of the trucks carrying the gearing engine and boiler supplying the power. The machine is self propelled and moves steadily forward, discharging a stream of fine dirt upon a traveling belt conveyor.

The largest machines of the wheel type are capable of digging a trench fifty-four inches wide and twelve feet deep. If a deeper trench is desired for any reason another type excavating machine may be obtained which is capable of digging thirty feet deep and up to one yard in width.

In this type machine the wheel carrier is replaced by a vertical carrier for the support of the endless chain with buckets which discharge the excavated material into a hopper from which it is carried by a screw conveyor to one side of the machine.

A Kiss and Its Penalty.

For kissing a stranger in a moment of exuberance an eighteen-year-old waitress at Tetchen has been sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment, writes the Prague correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette.

The offense took place at the railway station two nights ago, and the injured man complained at once to the police and the girl was arrested. So impressed was the magistrate with the heinousness of the crime that he increased the severity of the sentence by ordering the girl four fast days in the fortnight, and also directed that after completing the sentence she should be banished from Bohemia and sent to her home in Dresden.

CIRCUIT COURT DOCKET.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Spring term of our court opened Monday, with Judge S. L. Brewer presiding. The judge's charge to the grand jury was a good one, and went straight to the heart of the matter, for as he very truly said, if a juror observes his oath with fidelity he does his duty to himself and his country. His honor complimented Chilton county on the improvements in the court house and jail (particularly the jail). The grand jury is an exceptionally fine body of citizens taken as a whole, and it was an honor to be selected as foreman of such a body. W. A. Reynolds, of Jemison, was appointed foreman, and J. B. Marlar bailiff. The grand jurors are: James Popwell, A. Horn, W. I. Mullins, W. L. Lenoir, T. J. Taylor, C. M. Northcutt, N. B. Posey, W. Y. Nix, J. W. G. Kicker, A. E. Glasscock, D. I. Deramus, H. MEMORIES.

I remember, I remember
The gowns I used to wear;
The yellow figured jaconet,
The purple-sprigged mohair.
They always were a bit too long,
Or else not long enough;
And often, in the latter case,
Pieced out with different stuff.

I remember, I remember
The roses, red and white,
Upon my bayadere barege—
(It must have been a sight!)
My solferino alizarine—
My lilac satines—
We gave that to an orphan child.
(The child is living yet!)

I remember, I remember
My magenta wool delaine;
My salmon taglioni, too,
('Twas lined with satin jean).
My lovely light blue empress cloth,
Picked out with bands of dove,
I wore the night Joe came to call
And told me of his love.

I remember, I remember
Those gowns so quaint and queer;
I wore them with a happy heart
For any a happy year.
I have an ivory satin now,
Embroidered fair with pearl;
But, ah, I'm farther off from heaven
Than when I was a girl.

UNCLE RICHARD'S ADVICE.

By MARY GRACE HALPINE.

"NEVER propose to a woman by gaslight, my dear boy," was the dying injunction of Mr. Culver, to his nephew and heir, Richard.

"I suppose you will marry," groaned the old man, after a pause, looking sorrowfully at the frank young face that was bending over him. "It's a family failing, that is. All the Culvers married—I married."

Here he groaned again.

Richard had a very vivid recollection of the selfish, exacting woman whose death was the only real kindness she ever did her husband, as well as the greatest possible relief.

"Don't you worry, uncle," he said, clasping his warm fingers around the wrinkled, bloodless hand that was lying upon the counterpane. "I don't mean to be fooled by any woman. In fact, I don't think I shall ever marry."

"That's what all young men say; that's what I said. But you'll do it; and I'm not going to waste my breath in asking you not to do it. Only don't propose by gaslight. If you do, ten to one you'll be sorry for it all the rest of your life. If you fall in love with a pretty woman get up for the occasion, and feel tempted to tell her so by gaslight, just sleep on it. If you must make a fool of yourself, let it be in the morning, when you know what you are about."

There was not much that Richard would not have promised the eccentric old man, who, in spite of all his oddities, had been to him so kind and generous a friend, especially at a time like this.

So he gave the required promise, to his uncle's visible relief, who said no more, except to enjoin his nephew to have him buried in a remote corner of the cemetery, as far as possible from the late Mrs. Culver.

"I think I shall rest better," he said; those brief words being a whole commentary on the unquiet life he had led with her who was, in popular parlance, "the gentle soother of his cares and sorrows."

Whether it was a family trait or not, Richard certainly had a very kindly feeling toward everything in the guise of womanhood, from the fair and dainty creatures who smiled upon him from out their marvelous adornments, to the more material and matter-of-fact specimens who got up his linen and scrubbed out his office.

Fine looking and with the double advantage of wealth and social standing, our hero was the recipient of many attentions from anxious mammas and marriageable daughters, but whether it was the effect of his uncle's ill luck, and consequent warnings, or because he liked them all too well to have any individual preference, he remained heart whole until he met Miss Ida Selwyn.

It was a genuine case of love at first sight, so far as he was concerned at least. Her complexion was so brilliant, she had such lovely dark eyes, and such a pretty way of raising them to his and then letting them droop until the long, jetty lashes rested quiveringly upon the rose cheek, that he was quite captivated by their magic spell. Day by day the charm grew stronger to which he was such a willing captive until he finally felt that to win her for his wife would be the crowning joy and triumph of his life.

A strong impulse came over him to tell her this, as he was seated alone with her one evening in a cozy corner of her father's parlor. Ida had just been singing and playing for him one of those sweet and tender strains which take such a strong hold on the heart and imagination of youth.

As he saw the soft light that brooded in the dark eyes that were turned upon him he was almost sure that she would lend a favorable ear to the story that was trembling upon his lips.

In trying to clothe in words the tumultuous thoughts that were struggling for utterance, Richard lifted his eyes to the jets of flame that cast such a soft, subdued radiance around. As he did so there flashed upon his mind his uncle's dying injunction and his own promise. Instead of the blooming countenance on which he was gazing with all a lover's rapture he saw a wrinkled face, surmounted by thin, gray locks, whitened more by sorrows than years; he heard again those feeble, tremulously spoken words: "Never propose to a woman by gaslight, my dear boy!"

True, it was a foolish promise to give, but he had given it. He felt this to be the most favorable time and opportunity, but he would not break his word, even to win the woman who seemed to him to be the embodiment of all womanly grace and goodness.

Our hero had arranged to leave town the next day on a trip to the mountains, to be gone several weeks, and he determined that he would not go without telling the story that had so nearly escaped his lips the evening before.

It was nearly 10 when he started out upon his errand. A good night's sleep, and the fresh breeze and calm, clear light of the beautiful morning in spring had cooled somewhat the fever that was more of the brain than the heart, and more of the senses than either.

And as he tried to recall the words which rose so readily to his lips a few hours ago, and which then appeared so easy to speak and appropriate to the occasion, but which now sounded so flat, strained and unnatural that he rejected them in disgust, he began to think that if his uncle's advice were universally followed many of the proposals made would never be made at all.

"I never called on her in the morning before," he said to himself, the thought of finding his adored in new attire and surroundings giving a quicker motion to heart and step as he turned the corner which brought her father's house into view.

A bright-eyed daughter of Erin, who had often let him in, was polishing the door knob just outside.

"Good morning, Norah. Is Miss Ida in?"

"Sure, an' ye'll find her in the sittin' room, sir," said the girl, a broad smile upon her honest face as she stepped aside to let him pass. "I heard her spakin' in there a minute ago. The door to the left, sir."

On familiar terms as Richard was with the Selwyns he had never been admitted to the family sitting room, and he hesitated a moment. Then he turned the knob of the door to which he was directed, which moved noiselessly on its hinges.

Though the room was not dark it seemed so to eyes just coming out of the sunshine, and from the threshold where he stood Richard could see only the dim outline of a woman curled up in a large chair, the back of which was toward him. Thinking to give her some intimation of his presence he tapped at the half-open door.

"What do you stand knocking at the door for?" cried a voice, which, in spite of its high key, he did not fail to recognize. "You spoiled my dress yesterday, and now you want to give me my death of cold, I suppose. Because you're a relation you think I'll put up with everything. Pa only took you out of charity, and a pretty return you make for it."

To say that Richard was thunderstruck is to say little. Thinking that it must be some delusion of the senses he advanced toward the speaker, who now turned her head.

Uttering a little shriek she half arose, and then, sinking back, made an abortive attempt to hide herself.

"I beg pardon, Miss Selwyn!" stammered our hero. "It is Miss Selwyn, I believe?"

He might well ask the question. That dingy, soiled wrapper, innocent of cuff or collar, and those untidy shoes; the sallow face, with its dismayed and angry expression; the hair, part of it strained away from the face in a little pug at the back of the head, the rest bristling across the forehead in innumerable curl papers, presenting an appearance so unlike the lovely, daintily attired woman he had known that for some moments he could only stare at her in astonishment and disgust.

Our hero could never clearly recall what he said on that memorable occasion; he only knows that he carried out the idea that was uppermost in his mind—to beat as sudden a retreat as he decently could.

In his haste and confusion, instead of taking the one which led into the hall, he opened the door into the dining room, whose only occupant was a blooming, blue-eyed maiden, who was busily engaged in "putting it to rights."

Comprehending the situation at a glance, she smilingly offered to conduct our hero to the outer door, who expressed his thanks, and regrets for the trouble he had caused her in as courtly terms as his confused ideas enabled him to use.

"It is no trouble," she said, with a blush and smile, that dwelt long in his memory.

"What an escape!" thought Richard, as he went down the steps. "Who would believe that a woman could appear and look so different?"

Then his thoughts reverted to the fair vision of which he had obtained so brief a glimpse. How pretty she looked in the neat print, that fitted so perfectly the beautifully rounded form, and how perfectly she smiled and blushed. There was no sham, no false color there, surely.

Not many days after, Richard stood upon the piazza of the Mountain House, where he had spent a few weeks of every year during quite a succession of them.

As he glanced around he saw a young lady leaning against one of the pillars, the outline of whose form and partly averted face looked strangely familiar. A silver-haired man was standing beside her whom he recognized as soon as he turned his head.

"How do you do, Mr. Selwyn?" he said, advancing toward him with extended hand.

The old gentleman shook hands with him warmly, and then turning to the young lady, said:

"My niece, Jennie, Mr. Culver."

"I think we have met before," said Richard, with a smile, as he bowed low in response to this.

Her heightened color and the mirthful gleam in the eyes that met his were the young lady's only reply to this intimation, but they made Richard's heart beat warmly at the recollection they implied.

"My niece goes out into society so little that I had no idea that you were acquainted," said Mr. Selwyn, on whom this little by-play was lost. "My wife and daughter have gone to Saratoga, but we—Jennie and I—thought we should enjoy better a trip to the mountains."

Richard was greatly relieved to find that he should be under no necessity of meeting the woman he had last seen under circumstances so embarrassing to both.

This being Jennie's first visit to the mountains everything to her was new and wondrously beautiful. Richard had been there so frequently that he knew just how and where to go to obtain the finest views, and he lost no time in offering his services as guide to Jennie and her uncle.

Mr. Selwyn gladly accepted his offer in behalf of his niece.

"My climbing days are over," he said, with a smile, "but I am anxious to have Jennie see everything that is worth seeing."

And so, to Richard's great delight, it was arranged that he was to be her escort and companion on every occasion. As for Jennie, she threw herself into his plans and suggestions with all the zest and abandon of a child.

Clad in thick boots, a brown linen dress, which cleared the ground all of two inches, and a broad brimmed hat, she clambered up hills and over rocks in a way that would have shocked her fine lady aunt and cousin, but which surprised and delighted Richard, who had never seen anything like it before.

The happy week that followed passed all too quickly. So, when Mr. Selwyn announced one morning as they were all seated out upon the piazza his intention of returning the next day, the shock brought a sudden revelation to the heart of each as to how much of the happiness they had enjoyed was due to the presence and companionship of the other.

Perhaps Mr. Selwyn suspected how it was between the two, for, in a few minutes he went into the house, leaving them alone together.

The rays of the rising sun fell like a halo around Jennie's head as she listened to the story, old, yet ever new, which Richard poured into her willing ear. In his eyes the blushes of the dawn were not brighter than those which dyed her cheek, or the song of the birds in the branches above their heads half so sweet to him as the sweet assurance that made him so supremely blessed.

"I wooed my other love under the gaslight," he cried, "but you—oh, my beloved! it is meet that I should woo and win you thus, who are to be henceforth the joy and sunshine of my heart and home."—New York Weekly.

"GIVE ME POWDER AND BALLS."

Being a Dream Tale, Related of the New French President.

Many stories are being told of M. Fallieres, the newly-elected French President, and one of them is worth retelling, says the London Globe.

M. Fallieres is a corpulent, heavy built man, and it seems that after dinner he occasionally falls off into a postprandial nap. One evening, when the new President was dining at the Elysee, after a heavy day at the Senate, he found himself utterly unable to keep his eyes open, and when the manservant brought round M. Fallieres' coffee that worthy gentleman was asleep. Fearing to wake him, the domestic placed the coffee on the table and retired. And M. Fallieres slumbered on. And as he slept he dreamed. Whether the memory of the troublous times of his youth was upon him, or whether the vision of the German Emperor with his legions crossing the frontier disturbed his digestion, we are not told, but as he dreamed the veteran President of the Senate was heard to murmur the famous line of Victor Hugo, "Give me powder and balls." Then he lapsed into silence again, and again he was heard, in a deep, sleepy voice, calling for powder and balls. At first M. Loubet, who was sitting near his old friend, paid no attention, and the guests continued their conversation. But when, for the sixth time, M. Fallieres repeated his request, "Give me powder and balls," the President of the Republic turned imploringly to his companions at the table, and in a somewhat irritated voice, exclaimed, "For heaven's sake give him powder and balls."

At this moment M. Fallieres awoke, but as his fellow-guests discreetly pretended to have observed nothing, he quietly helped himself to a piece of sugar and drank up his coffee.

Wireless Telegraphy's Danger.

One of the characteristic features of wireless telegraphy is, from the point of view of the staff, the constant risk of being struck by lightning. Whenever there is thunder about the danger is very real. Should the electric fluid strike one of the antennae connected with every wireless telegraphy station, the wires would be destroyed and the lives of a whole staff would be in peril. A quartermaster of the French fleet, named Connan, has invented an automatic apparatus for counteracting the lightning, should it strike an antennae, by diffusing the electric fluid in space and isolating the operators. Preliminary trials have given good results, and the Minister of Marine has named a committee to carry out exhaustive practical tests.

THE PULPIT.

A SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY DR. CHARLES EDWARD LOCKE.

Subject: The Universal King.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Dr. Charles Edward Locke, pastor of the Hanson Place M. E. Church, preached Sunday in the New York Avenue M. E. Church on "Jesus Christ the Universal King." The sermon was the annual one before the New York East Conference. The text was from Revelation xi:15: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ." Among other things Dr. Locke said:

With His own hand God wrote on the foundations of history, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." On the radiant advent morning the angel said to the bewildered shepherds, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people;" and, later, the Great Teacher Himself announced, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me!" Though Confucius died of a broken heart, fearing he had spoken no truths which would survive him, and Socrates drank in despondency the hemlock in his cave overlooking Athens, yet Jesus Christ, the world's Great Optimist, cried out in triumph in the midst of the agonies of the cross—"It is finished!" and Paradise Lost became Paradise Regained. John, the Revelator, in the seraphic isolation of his exile, saw in his vision the fulfillment of all these prophecies, and exultantly wrote, "The knigdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ."

It was a long looked for psychological moment when Bethlehem's star appeared above the dimpled hills of Judea. Civilization had slipped down from the hoary highlands of Bactria to the lowlands of Hindustan; it then moved westward, tarrying long enough to build its towers in Persia, its temples in Greece, its tombs in Egypt and its thrones in Rome. At its birth Christianity encountered the fierce opposition of emperors and armies. Rome was mistress of land and sea. The founder of Christianity was a Roman subject, its chief apostle a Roman citizen. The whole Roman empire was hurled across the path of the progress of Christ. His followers suffered, but in the sign of the cross they conquered.

Our forefathers bravely followed the guiding star to the summit of the Alleghany Mountains and fixed the western boundary of the new republic; but the years pushed the frontiers westward, and when at last against the prophecies of American statesmen the plains were crossed by the intrepid pioneer, then autocratic lawmakers defiantly announced that the serrated peaks of the Rocky Mountains would outline the western boundary of the nation, but steadily and gracefully moved that point of light until at last it mingled its silver beams with the golden embroidery of the sunset coast. Then even the wisest of modern magi thought that the star of empire had become a fixed star, but faithfully it has pursued its noiseless tread until to-day it is brilliantly shining above eastern archipelagoes and continents. We are the creatures of that star and must keep up with its aerial flight, for wherever it lingers there is another Bethlehem's cradle and another advent hymn.

Within the lifetime of many here present the star appeared in the Asiatic heavens and the angel choir again sang "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men." The year 1858 has been called the Annus Mirabilis of modern missions, and truly it was a "year wonderful," for the doors were opened to one thousand million of the human race. In that year India was transferred from the clutches of the avaricious East India Company to the British crown and Queen Victoria became Empress of India. By the Treaty of Tientsin the ports and interior of China were opened and the people were permitted to accept Christianity without persecution, and Japan, after 200 years of exclusion, made its treaty with Great Britain. Now, let us see how these great kingdoms of the earth are becoming the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.

India has a population of 250,000,000 and an area of 1,860,000 square miles. Suttee, infanticide and the voracious juggernaut are gone forever. Because of the huge reservoirs constructed by English foresight famine is rapidly disappearing, and the gradual elevation of women is taking place. India will be Christian from the Himalayas to Ceylon, from Bombay to Calcutta.

China has had continuous authentic history for forty centuries. The first real character in Chinese history was the Emperor Yu, who ruled 2204 B. C. The Chinese are supposed to be the descendents of Shem, the oldest son of Noah. They settled on the banks of the Yellow River and established a kingdom coeval with Babylonia and Egypt, and before Abraham came out of Chaldea.

Four hundred and six millions of people and 4,225,000 square miles, and has a coast line of 2500 miles. The climate is very much like our own. There are broad rivers, lofty mountains and valleys of extraordinary fertility. There is vast mineral wealth. Beside iron, gold, silver and copper there are immense coal fields; all of which lie almost undisturbed waiting for the coming of the higher civilization which will some day adorn this drowsy nation. China lies partly in the temperate zone, where the greatest nations have developed and where the possibilities of power and permanency are assured.

They are an industrious people, always busy, quiet and peaceable. Whatever lethargy characterises the country as a government, the typical Chinaman is a shrewd, active, successful toiler. The Chinese invented printing and gunpowder; first used the magnetic needle; made the finest porcelain and to-day manufacture the finest silk and the most exquisite embroidery.

They are an educated people. All candidates for official position—which is said to be the universal ambition of all citizens—must pass difficult examinations. Of course I do not need to remind you that their standards of education are low; their astronomy is picturesquely mingled with astrology and all their science is pathetically behind the studies of the West.

They are a reverential people. They can hardly be said to be a very religious people. Their religion consists in rites and ceremonies rather than in doctrines and principles. The basis of government and society is the fifth commandment—filial devotion. Obedience to parents and respect for old age are everywhere persistently inculcated and practiced. Herein lies the secret of whatever of virtue and permanency may be found among Chinese. When a man reaches eighty years of age his name is reported to the Emperor, and a yellow robe is presented to him as a mark of imperial respect on the presumption that his life must have been virtuous or it would not have been prolonged.

All that China needs to make it a progressive and useful nation is Christianity, with its Christ and His institutions. They are a more promising people than were our ancestors in Britain before their conversion to Christianity through the preaching of Augustin and the graceful influence of Queen Bertha, the wife of Ethelbert. They have won their way by venerable age to everything which Occidental nations can do for them. Confucianism, with its negative virtues, and Buddhism, with its intangible mysteries, have been tried and found wanting. May China not be a nation which is to be born in a day? There is a tradition that the Apostle Thomas carried the Gospel first to China. As early as 1288 Pope Nicholas sent missionaries to China. There is a God in Heaven who has not forgotten the Chinaman.

What shall I say of Japan, the land of little people and of great deeds; of culture and courtesy, with a population of 45,000,000 living among 4000 islands whose area is 162,000 square miles—about three times the size of the State of New York? A phenomenal nation. Only thirty years ago it was a crime to accept Christianity in Japan. In 1860 an English sailing ship just returning from the Orient reached the Thames. On board were two Japanese youths, who had worked their way before the mast. Disconsolate and alone, they went to bed supperless that first night because all the crew had gone ashore. A few months ago one of those Japanese boys again returned to Great Britain. This time he was welcomed by the Lord Mayor and a distinguished company of such men as the Duke of Argyll and Lord Rosebery. He came as the guest of the city of London, and was lavishly entertained at the Mansion House. He was Marquis Ito, who has been four times the Prime Minister of Japan. This is a romantic epitome of the nation of Japan. Many of its statesmen are Christians. Admiral Togo has a Christian wife, and is himself not a pagan. In the recent war the bravest generals were Christian men. Japan was pagan yesterday, it is agnostic today, to-morrow it will be Christian.

Doubtless among the kingdoms of this world which the ecstatic John saw becoming the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ was the great empire of Russia. The Russians are a mighty, mysterious, paradoxical, providential people. Their ancestors are found among the ancient Scythians in Southern Europe five centuries before Christ, worshiping a sword fixed in the ground as an image of the god of war. Under the reign of Vladimer, 1000 A. D., the Russians became Christians, getting their religion not from Rome, but from Constantinople; hence they are Greek Christians.

The Russian has clear religious convictions and is devoted to the rites of his church. Senator Beveridge says: "The religious side of a Russian is all sides of him." His faith is serene and steady; the holy icons are reverently protected, and the devotion of the soldier is marked. Like Cromwell's army they often rush into battle with sacred songs on their lips.

Russia is in process of evolution. She is not "a bear that walks like a man," as Kipling said, but she is a man who has been acting like a bear. But it will be remembered that another nation in its developing history behaved so much like a quadruped that it will probably always be referred to as "Johnny Bull." Russia's mediævalism is being rebuked, and her virility, and integrity, and faith, and enterprise will yet bring her forth into a full-orbed Christian nation.

By their men ye shall know them! If there have been cruel and heartless rulers, there have also been epoch-making leaders. A nation must have permanent qualities of greatness which can claim among its master minds such men as Prince Kuropatkin, De Witte, Veretschagin and Leo Tolstoy.

The Anglo-Saxon and the Slav are to be the two great regenerating influences of Asia—the former moving westward, the latter moving eastward. The future of the world must reckon with the Russian. Other races have had their chance and failed. The two great peoples who could emancipate their own slaves are destined to teach the liberty of Christ to the nations at the ends of the earth. It is true of the Russian as it is true of the Anglo-Saxon that he not only conquers, but he assimilates.

At the end of the first century there were in the world 5,000,000 Christians; at the end of the tenth century 10,000,000; at the end of the fifteenth century 100,000,000; at the end of the eighteenth century 200,000,000, and at the end of the nineteenth century 500,000,000 Christians. In 1600 the inhabited surface of the earth was 43,798,600 square miles, of which only 3,480,000 was Christian. In 1906 the inhabited surface of the globe is 53,401,400 square miles, of which 44,619,100 is Christian and only 8,782,300 non-Christian. Truly, "the kingdoms of this world are becoming the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ!"

Expect Blessings.

Begin to-day with the determination to find blessing. His tender mercies are about us on every side. Be on the lookout for them and you will find them. "The more we look for them, the more of them we will see. Blessings brighten when we count them. Out of the determination of the heart the eyes see.

"If you want to be gloomy, there's gloom enough to keep you glum; if you want to be glad, there's gleam enough to keep you glad. Say, 'Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits.' Better lose count in enumerating your blessings, than lose your blessings in fretting over your troubles. "Be thankful unto Him and bless His name!"—Rev. G. R. Lunn, in Christian Intelligencer.

Rodin as an Epigrammatist.

Rodin wrote a letter to a French collector recently that shows that he has something of Whistler's turn for epigrammatic retort. The collector had ordered a bronze, which the sculptor had promised to let him have for 6000 francs. When the bronze was delivered, however, it was accompanied by a bill for 6000 francs and a letter complaining that the increase in the price was due to the beautiful green which was not nominated in the bond, with which the sculptor had covered the bronze. When the collector protested that he had had the sculptor's word for the original price, Rodin replied: "It is the word, but the statue, that is gilt."

One on Mrs. J.

In her daily altercation with the man over the short measure delivered, Mrs. Jones one morning said to him, in half-angry good nature, "I don't see what makes you put so much with your ice! You know you can't take any of it with you to the next world."

The man paused, with his hand on the doorknob. "Yes, Mrs. Jones," he said, "but you must remember that if you was to see me coming with a block of ice to you in the next world you'd be so glad to get it that you wouldn't have a word to say about short weight!"—Lippincott's.

An Ohioan's Biz Head.

When a Dayton hat concern, the Columbus Dispatch, sent to New York the special order for John's hat the telegraph quickly brought the reply that its customer's head had the largest head of any man in the United States, a hat size 8¾ was ordered. John Bullion is two years old. His mother has a really large head, but his father's is but normal size. The largest hat carried in stock by any hatter is 8 inches in circumference, and could not have been accommodated by any retailer in the United States.

Emancipation of Man Stops Short of "Mother."

The bread-winning ... now open to women are numerous ... she has again become an important factor in manufacturing and commercial industry. The last census of the United States shows her engaged in hundreds of vocations, including the learned professions. It is ... revolutions never go backward ... in this case there is evidently a return, in part, to primitive conditions ... women did all the work of ... hold and the men thought all ... rept warfare, beneath their ... In civilized countries—in this ... for example seventy-five years ... work was more evenly distributed between the sexes, men doing ... out-of-door farm work, carpentering, blacksmithing, shoemaking, etc., while women were spinners, weavers, dressmakers and the like, contributing equally with the menfolk to the family's wealth. In all families of the wealthiest women carried on useful industries, reducing the purchases at "the store" to a minimum. ... introduction of the "factory system" deprived women of a great part of their employments.

The spinning wheel became a piece of ornament. The domestic loom went out of use. Even the domestic arts of preserving, jam making and bottling fruits and vegetables for winter use were invaded by the factory canneries. At length women, ... from housekeeping, had almost nothing to do. Man was the breadwinner almost exclusively, the wife and daughters being restricted to the lightsome and sometimes exigorous task of spending his income. This state of things when wages were scanty, was better than the savage state, in which women do all the work.

For women who had no men to support them it was wholly intolerable. The remedy was found in widening and diversifying women's employments. This was gradually applied, until now women, as employes in stores, offices, factories, hospitals, schools, etc., have become largely self-sustaining. The enlargement of woman's sphere is a good thing, giving a more or less adequate training to solitary women and enabling wives and daughters to contribute to the family income. Comforts and even luxuries are brought within the reach of families, which if only the husband's earnings were available would eke out a meagre existence.

There are indications that man always alive to his opportunities—is saving a relapse to the primitive conditions, in which the women ... supported themselves but him. This is evidenced, it seems, ... popularity of a song of which the refrain runs "Let the women do the work for the man," and in the general applause that greets another song in which the burden is "Everybody ... but father." In this choice production is recited that "Mother takes in washing, and so does sister Ann." The other sisters presumably swell the family revenue, one as a saleslady, another as typewriter, and a third as cashier in a candy factory. Even the boys, while subject to maternal influence, earn wages. "Everybody ... but father." Interpreted as a reflection of former conditions, not merely of seventy-five years ago, but ... of our savage ancestors, this emancipation of man is interesting. "Our man," it is said, enjoys the ... seeing in the leisure of his ... nothing less than a just reward for his labors during the long ... in which his daughters and sons ... growing from babyhood to adulthood. The Largest Book.

The biggest book in the world has just been found in the British Museum, where, like Turners pictures in the National Gallery, it lay unnoticed many years. The huge volume is a Dutch tome containing maps and descriptions of the world as it was known to the Dutch geographers of 1650. It is as tall as the average man, bein five feet ten inches high and four feet eight inches wide. It is superbly bound and decorated with gilt tooling and gold clasps. The gigantic title-page is hand illumined, the initial letters being of gold. The great volume was presented to King Charles II before his departure from Holland to go to England to claim the throne in 1660. The book came into the possession of George III, who presented it, with his library, to the British Museum.

Monk Invented Roulette.

Strange as it may seem, the roulette wheel, that alluring machine by which so many fortunes have been won and lost (mostly lost), was devised by a monk, Pascal, during a six months' "retreat" for meditation and prayer. He probably little realized the gigantic popularity as a gambling device his simple invention would in later years attain. In Monte Carlo, the greatest gambling resort in the world, more than $5,000,000 are lost by players every year. The Casino at Monte Carlo is controlled by a firm which styles itself "The Sea Bathing and Strangers' Club Company." Though no one was ever known to dip a toe in the surf at Monte Carlo during the winter season, the profits of this company in the winter season of 1904-5 amounted to $7,204,999.

Artificial Surf Baths.

German lake resorts and other inland watering places are interested in a novel artificial surf bath which was tried last summer in the Starnberg Lake, near Munich. A big tank is built, or a portion of a lake or river is enclosed. At the outer end is placed the wave-making machinery, which consists of an oscillating partition of a large plunger, which is dropped into the water at regular intervals. The result is a curious substitute for natural waves.

AWFUL SUFFERING

From Dreadful Pains From Wound on Foot—System All Run Down—Miraculous Cure by Cuticura.

"Words cannot speak highly enough for the Cuticura Remedies. I am now seventy-two years of age. My system had been all run down. My blood was so bad that blood poisoning had set in. I had several doctors attending me, so finally I went to the hospital, where I was laid up for two months. My foot and ankle were almost beyond recognition. Dark blood flowed out of wounds in many places and I was so disheartened that I thought surely my last chance was slowly leaving me. As the foot did not improve you can readily imagine how I felt. I was simply disgusted and tired of life. I stood this pain, which was dreadful, for six months, and during this time I was not able to wear a shoe and not able to work. Some one spoke to me about Cuticura. The consequences were I bought a set of the Cuticura Remedies of one of my friends, who was a druggist, and the praise that I gave after the second application is beyond description; it seemed a miracle, for the Cuticura Remedies took effect immediately. I washed the foot with the Cuticura Soap before applying the Ointment, and I took the Resolvent at the same time. After two weeks' treatment my foot was healed completely. People who had seen my foot during my illness and who have seen it since the cure can hardly believe their own eyes. Robert Schoenhauer, Newburgh, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1905."

Great Churches of the World.

A Roman journal gives a list of the great churches of the world. The estimate allows four persons to every square yard of space available. Milan Cathedral stands at the head, with capacity for 37,000; St. Peter's hold 32,000; St. Paul's, 25,600. The capacity of San Petronio, Bologna, the Florence Cathedral and the Antwerp Cathedral is about 24,000 apiece; that of St. Sophia, Constantinople, is 23,000; that of St. John Lateran, Rome, about the same (22,900); that of Notre Dame, Paris, 21,000. These are the nine great churches of the world. The Pisa Cathedral comes tenth, with a capacity of 13,000. The cathedral of the City of Mexico and that of Notre Dame in Montreal are the two largest churches in North America, though they belong to the second class, with St. Stephen, Vienna (12,000), and St. Dominic, Bologna (12,000).

Marry and Live Long.

Marriage is an institution highly conducive to the health of both husband and wife. Statistics prove that among married men over 20 years of age and women over 40 the mortality rate is far less than among those who remain single. Among the widowed and divorced the mortality is exceptionally great. Suicides among the unmarried are much more numerous than among the married. The matrimonial state promotes temperance in every form. Furthermore, the probable duration of life of a married man of 30 exceeds that of his unmarried brother by five years, and the wife may expect to live one year longer than a single woman of the same age.

Discovery of Anthracite.

According to an article published half a century ago, anthracite coal was discovered in 1791 around the Lehigh river in Pennsylvania. On the eastern side of the river in a log cabin lived a hunter named Philip Ginter, with his wife and child. After a poor breakfast in the year named he left his family in the cabin and sought to replenish his little store of food from the forest. His quest continued all day. As the shades of evening fell he found himself near the top of Sharp Mountain and many miles from home. A storm came on, and as he hastened on his way he stumbled over a fallen tree and a large black stone.

He had heard of "stone coal" existing in the mountains, and concluded this stone must be a specimen. He took a piece with him and later gave it to a Col. Jacob Weiss, who then resided near the site of the present Mauch Chunk. The latter sent the specimen for examination to Philadelphia, where it was passed upon by many alleged scientists.

It remained for Charley Cist, a printer, to declare that the specimen was anthracite coal. He asked Col. Weiss to reward Ginther and at the same time to secure as much land in the vicinity of the find as possible.

After the navigation of the Lehigh river had been improved by order of the legislature coal was brought down to some nail works at Fairmount. Even then it was only by accident it was discovered how to burn this hard coal. Such a fire as it made had never been seen before. The newspapers told the story and the character of the coal was established for all time.

The Sharp Mountain mine was an open quarry and enormous quantities of anthracite were taken from it. The veins of coal and slate were said to be seventy feet in thickness, and from it there were mined 850,000 tons. The Schuylkill region was opened in 1822, and soon proper grates were produced, and the hard coal trade became established. An era of speculation followed. Villages sprang up like mushrooms and adventurers flocked from all parts to Pottsville.

One day I collapsed, fell insensible on the sidewalk, and then wasted away in bed for ten weeks. After being given up, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. In a couple of months I regained my old health, and now weigh 188 pounds. Twelve boxes did it, and I have been well two years."

Oyster's Growth.

The oyster is not much larger than the head of a fair-sized pin at the end of a fortnight, and at three months about equal to a split pea. At the end of four years' growth it is fit for the market. Oysters live to the age of from twelve to fifteen years. According to one naturalist, these bivalves feed on monads—the most minute form of marine life.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

The Full-Blood in Washington

WHEN INDIANS VISIT THE "GREAT WHITE FATHER."

Commissioner Leupp's Late Order and Its Effect on the Delegations to the National Capital—Beveridge's Old Indian Boarding House—Development of the Tribal Lobbyist—Crazy Snake's Hopeless Quest.

In Washington it is said that one of the incidental effects of the recent order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that delegations of Indians from reservations shall no longer be encouraged to visit the "Great White Father," may be to close the capital's old "Indian boarding house." For twenty years, in Third street, Northwest, Benjamin F. Beveridge has acted as host to the tribesmen who have appeared in person to urge some cause before the President or Congress. Long before he took up the management of the boarding house, in Third street, he and his mother had been conducting the old Washington House and making Indians especially welcome. So it has come about that Mr. Beveridge knows more Indians of different tribes than almost anybody who is not in the service. As one of his friends puts it, "When Beveridge sees an Indian he does not cry out, 'Ha, a redskin!' and shoot down the wild savage. Instead, he calls out to the hired girl, 'Jinny, here's another one; set an extra plate for supper.'"

The habit of going to Washington "to visit the Great White Father" is one that has had a long time in which to become fixed. The Beveridges have known the visitors for forty years, and for over forty years before that the delegations had brightened the city with their blankets and head-dresses. Back on the reservations tales are told of how the visitors "painted the town red." The tradition was encouraged that Crazy Horse or Standing Bear or Little Old Woman or any one of a dozen of the old war chiefs paraded the halls of Congress in full dress and whooped out the war songs of the tribe to the consternation of the pale-face legislators.

But Beveridge's idea of the visiting savage is different. "In my forty years of boarding them here," he says, "I have never had any trouble with them. With some of them I have to be careful—with half I should say—about whisky. When they begin to drink there is no stopping them short of paralysis, and some of the intermediate stages are noisy and full of possibilities for trouble. A full-blood doesn't know the meaning of temperance. It's either teetotalism or dead drunkenness for him.

WHEN DELEGATIONS MEET.

"Still, those who do get drunk and noisy don't break out of the house and quarrel with the whites. Their rows are confined to themselves. Years ago when the tribes were frequently at war with one another, parties from the warring sections would come together in my house, and, after the whisky bottle had been passed around, take up the fight where they had left off at home. Then there would be noise and colored fireworks, though never, so far as I can recall, has there been actual bloodshed. In the last fifteen years, of course, my house has been as quiet as an Old Ladies' Home. The saloons long ago stopped selling liquor to the blanketed fellows, and the stray bottle that gets in is soon discovered and broken by the cool-headed among the party."

Those Indians who appear in Washington from the remoter reservations always come accompanied by an interpreter. To him is left all the talking, though, as boarding-keeper Beveridge says, many of the Indians know more English than they will confess to knowing. Separated as they sometimes are from their interpreter, it is surprising that they are able to get about and make their wants known unless some of the despised English acquired on the reservations has stuck to them.

A recent story of the visiting Indian's ability to take care of himself was told in Washington. A street car on Fourteenth street was occupied on one side by half a dozen well-fed, well-gowned women whose skirts were spread over the seat space between them in a way to discourage the two men standing and hanging to a strap. Presently three more men climbed aboard, and, after glaring at the vacant spaces between the women, resignedly hung themselves from convenient straps. At the next stop one man left the car and a blanketed Indian got on. As one who saw the incident described it, "that Indian didn't belong to the 'wooden Indian' tribe that merely gulped over things and let it go at gulping.

"He was a tall, straight, very fine-looking red man, about thirty years old, and his countenance was full of character. He was about as fine looking a buck as has been seen on the Washington streets for some time.

A BRAVE'S RESOURCEFULNESS.

"He examined the matrons' side of the car carefully, and with an obvious eye to measurement. Then he examined each one of the matrons in turn. They all looked a trifle nervous under his careful scrutiny, which had a touch of austerity in it, too. But they didn't make any offer to move up and give anybody a chance.

"The blanketed Indian was waiting for them to do just this thing. When he perceived that there wasn't going to be any move in them, he picked out a space between two especially stout and aggressive-looking holders of two or three normal seats each, and he pointed with a long, bony, determined finger at what ought to have been the vacant space. Then he made a simple gesture with his open hand held horizontally. The gesture said as plain as words: 'Divide up there, you. I'm going to sit down there and take a little rest for myself.'

"The two stout matrons divided in a hurry, and gathered together their skirts, and then all of them followed suit, not without hard stares at the ornately blanketed Indian. When they had moved moderately close together, there was plenty of room on their side of the car for the four men still standing up. The four men sat down and looked deep thankfulness in the direction of the fine profiled Indian in the blanket."

The sort of Indian visitor who does not patronize the old boarding house and who does not need an interpreter is perhaps more familiar to members of Congress now than the blanketed kind. These men—shrewd, educated lawyers from the Indian Territory, or wealthy wheat farmers from the Northwest—reveal their origin and mission only in a darker cast of countenance, higher cheekbones, and a certain shifty keenness of glance not usually noted in the white lobbyist. Their clothes are of the mode that prevails in their own country; they are well-groomed, and their speech displays nothing more than the sectional peculiarities that Washington expects in her Congressmen. Their fees for appearing in the interests of their tribe are ample to support them in the usual haunts of the lobbyists or, in the case of the voluntary farmer delegate, there is no financial or other bar to residence in the best hotels.

In certain cases a tribe will maintain a representative in Washington practically all the year. Such a one is the Seneca, Andrew John, who is called the "star boarder" at Beveridge's. For years he has spent the winter at the National capital on the theory that his people need to follow the enactments of Congress. As he puts the case, "We Senecas in New York State are a nation, independent of the United States, with whom the United States has made treaties. Also we are a corporation existing by special act of the New York Legislature. Now, with such complicated tribal relationships to keep up, why shouldn't a representative be here in Washington? All other nations keep their diplomatic agents here."

CRAZY SNAKE'S MISSION.

One of the last of many of the tragic missions that have drawn the full-blood delegations to Washington was that headed recently by the old Creek, Chit-to-hah-je, or Crazy Snake. Fifty-five years old, the grandson of old Chief Ch-poh-ta-ho-la, who was a great figure in tribal history and negotiated the treaty of 1832 with the United States, Crazy Snake took a small band of followers to Washington this winter to insist that the pledges made in the old treaty be observed by the Government. The full-blood faction headed by Crazy Snake numbers something like a thousand, and it is in sympathy with a like faction in the Choctaw nation, and the more numerous Kee-too-Wah Society in the Cherokee nation. All of these full-bloods have resisted the break-up of their tribal governments and the allotment of their lands in severalty. Their protests, of course, have not availed against the great majority of the membership of the tribes. Their appeals to the "Dawes Commission" have been listened to patiently—and, of necessity, disregarded.

"Let us go straight up to Washington," said Crazy Snake at last, "and put the matter before the President himself." Money enough to pay the expenses of a small delegation was collected, and, with an interpreter, the full-bloods set out to make a last appeal to be allowed to go on living a communal life. Of course, the protest could not be heeded. The policy of merging the Indians of Indian Territory with the whites and extinguishing the old tribal relationships in the new State to be formed out of Oklahoma and Indian Territory is definitely settled and approved. But Crazy Snake "spoke his piece," and then went back to call his people in council and tell them that it was hopeless.

The newspaper correspondents in Indian Territory, on learning that the "Night Hawks" had assembled at Old Hickory council grounds, sent out their periodic batch of stories concerning an "expected Indian uprising." But all that was really settled at the Old Hickory grounds when Crazy Snake called his people together was that they were made to understand that a power more far-reaching than a tribal council has intervened in the Indians' behalf; that the "Great White Father" at Washington can find out quicker about the needs of his red children without calling them to the White House; and that a wise commissioner wishes it understood that the man "speaks with a forked tongue" who talks to the full-blood about the potency of a "big talk" at Washington. The Indians will soon adapt themselves to the new order, and Washington will gradually realize that one more problem has been settled by the patient years.—New York Evening Post.

LOVER DEALS DEATH AND PERISHES

Infatuated Operator Creates Reign of Terror Near Atlanta.

TERRORIZED THREE COUNTIES

James H. Clark Runs Amuck—Armed With a Shotgun Madman Roamed at Large, Firing on All Who Approached.

Chamblee, Ga. — Crazed by disappointment in love, James H. Clark, a telegraph operator here, killed one man and left five others close to death before he shot himself through the heart at Dunwoody, a village five miles from this place. The madman terrorized for eighteen hours a community of thirty-four square miles, embracing parts of Fulton, De Kalb and Cobb counties. After killing one man outright, wounding six, some of whom will die, and firing a residence, Clark fled, pursued by a posse.

The posse surrounded him in a grove near Dunwoody. To a summons to surrender Clark answered by a shot. The posse and Clark exchanged shots for some minutes, when Clark, realizing that escape was not possible, put a revolver, which had only one cartridge left, to his breast and fired a bullet into his heart. As Clark fell dead the posse rushed in and riddled the corpse by repeated volleys. His overcoat, lying at his side, were perforated with honeysuckles.

Clark is supposed to have been crazed by his unrequited love for fourteen-year-old Nellie Gay, the pretty sister-in-law of James W. Purcell. Recently the love affair was broken up and Clark became convinced that Mr. and Mrs. Purcell had interfered.

A large part of the day Clark was in a drunken stupor, but during the afternoon he roused himself, and about 2 p. m. went to the home of E. S. Purcell, next door to the home of J. W. Purcell, where Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Purcell were at the time, and demanded admission. On being refused he broke in the door with an axe and was fired on by J. W. Purcell. The infuriated man secured a lot of kerosene oil, entered the kitchen of the Purcell home and set fire to it. When the flames burst out the Purcells were seen to fire, and Clark opened fire upon them from behind a tree. J. W. Purcell was shot in the thigh and a serious wound was inflicted. E. S. Purcell was shot in the hand. It is believed that in the return fire Clark was wounded in the head and side.

Clark went away, but returned about midnight, by which time the Purcells had gathered some of their neighbors to help them defend their homes. Clark made a second attempt to fire the house. A fusillade followed, shots being fired by those in the house and by Clark. The result of the midnight battle was that W. S. Mask, station agent, received a slight wound in the back of the neck. Clark was repulsed and did not attack the house again.

The crazed man, heavily armed, went down the railroad toward Dunwoody, where he appeared very early in the morning. Entering the store of Nash Cheek he demanded ammunition, his supply having been about exhausted. The news of his acts had been telephoned to Dunwoody.

When Cheek told Nash not to sell Clark any ammunition, Clark turned upon him with a revolver and fired, the ball entering Cheek's heart and killing him instantly. Nash dodged behind the counter as his partner sank to the floor and Clark fired two shots at him. Clark then walked behind the counter, supplied himself with cartridges from the store. As he walked away he met a man named Satterfield, to whom he handed seventy-five cents, in the statement that he had taken the ammunition and supposed that it would pay for it.

Clark started back toward Chamblee, walking along the railroad. He had gone only a short distance when he met Will Coker, whom he attacked, wounding him slightly. After going a little farther he plunged into a thick woods, later he was trailed by the posse. When Nellie Gay heard of Clark's deed she said: "I never loved him. He was hateful to me."

Convicted of Heresy and Suspended From Ministry.

He Will Appeal, Thereby Getting a Stay of Sentence--Court Stood 4 to 1.

Rochester, N. Y.—The ecclesiastical court which tried the Rev. Dr. Algernon F. Crapsey, rector of St. Andrew's Church, of Rochester, on charges of heresy, found him guilty and sentenced him to suspension from the ministry.

The court is divided, four members, W. C. Roberts, C. H. Boynton, G. S. Burrows and John Mills Gilbert, voting in favor of suspension, and the fifth member, Francis S. Durham, declaring his belief that Dr. Crapsey did not deny the doctrines of the church.

This in brief is the sentence of the court: "That the respondent be suspended from exercising the functions of a minister of this church until such time as he shall satisfy the ecclesiastical authority of the diocese that his belief and teaching conform to the doctrines of the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed."

It was announced that Dr. Crapsey will appeal to the court of review. The appeal will act as a stay of sentence. The decision was made public by Chancellor Brown in the office of James Breck Perkins, Dr. Crapsey's attorney. The accused clergyman was present when it was given out, but had nothing to say in regard to the decision.

The majority found Dr. Crapsey guilty, as follows:

1. That in his book, "Religion and Politics," he "impugns, if he does not express his belief in and denial of"

The doctrine that Jesus Christ is God, the Saviour of the world.

2. That in the fifteen extracts from "Religion and Politics" set forth in the presentment Dr. Crapsey "impugns and denies"

(a) That Christ was conceived by the Holy Ghost.

(b) The virgin birth of Christ.

(c) The physical resurrection.

Last of all the court found Dr. Crapsey guilty of violating three of his ordination vows by the doctrines which he has preached.

ARMY TO QUIT SAN FRANCISCO.

General Greely Fixes June 1 as Date For Withdrawal.

Oakland, Cal.—General Greely has notified the Finance Committee that he expects to be able to withdraw all of the Regular Army on duty in the city by June 1.

In explanation of his course, General Greely said that as matters were conducted at present there was every indication that the relief system would be in such definite and comprehensive shape by that time as to enable the Red Cross to assume full charge of the field.

The only exceptions to be made were in the cases of two or three refugee camps at the Presidio.

General Greely has transmitted to the War Department a report announcing that while conditions are improving, the miserable situation is indicated by the fact that food for 300,000 persons is being cooked on the streets.

Every relief contribution from the East is joyfully received.

The work of clearing away the debris is proceeding in a systematic, well-ordered manner, every able-bodied man being put to work.

TROOPS SLAY COWBOYS.

Fierce Riots Over Attempt to Lynch Colored Soldier.

Crawford, Neb.—Troops of the Tenth United States Cavalry, a negro regiment from Fort Robinson, clashed with the members of a cowboy mob who were attempting to lynch Sergeant Reed, confined in the city jail here on a charge of murdering Marshal Arthur A. Moss on Sunday night. Philip Murphy, alleged to be the leader, and another member of the mob were shot and killed by the soldiers, who were guarding the jail in which the soldier murderer was confined.

All day cowboys from the range gathered into Crawford, bent on lynching Reed. A guard of negro regulars was thrown around the jail. This is a cattle country, and hundreds of cowboys live in the county.

RELIEF OF SMALLER CITIES.

Fund of $20,000 Will Be Spent for Aid of Others Than San Franciscans.

Sacramento, Cal.—Rollin P. Grant, cashier of the New York National Exchange Bank, placed a fund of $20,000 in the hands of George W. Pettier, vice-president of the California Bankers' Association, to be used for the relief outside of San Francisco. Mr. Pettier says that the money probably will go to persons in Santa Rosa, San Jose and other places which, because of location, did not receive any aid from the general relief fund of San Francisco.

5 DEAD, 19 HURT IN COAL MINE.

Laborer Drops Can of Dynamite in the Shenandoah City Works.

Mahanoy City, Pa.—Five men are dead and nineteen injured as the result of a Hungarian mine laborer dropping a can of dynamite on the first lift of the East Buck Mountain vein in the Shenandoah City mine, operated by the Reading Company.

The explosion took place about 200 yards from the slope. Five mine laborers, all Hungarians, were literally blown to pieces.

The act was one of exceptional bravery. Miss McNally is an orphan, living with her grandmother. She is to get $400 a year for her education.

A bronze medal and $500 were awarded to William L. Wolff, of No. 1060 South Second street, Camden, N. J., who, on September 22, 1905, at the risk of his own life saved Albert S. Fossman and John Lewis, who had been precipitated into the water.

Other awards were:

A bronze medal and $500 each were given to Robert W. Simpson, the engineer of the tug of which Heagerty was pilot, and Michael Sasso, the fireman, both of Ashtabula.

LOST GOSPEL FRAGMENT

Discovery Announced of Christ's Words on Purification.

Written on a Scrap of Vellum, Yellowed by Sixteen Centuries, Found in Ruins of Oxyrhyncus.

London.—Drs. Grenfell and Hart, during continued researches of the ruins of Oxyrhyncus, whose ancient monasteries some years, ago yielded the famous Logia of Christ, found a fragment of a supposed lost gospel, which is now in Queen's College, Oxford.

It is a tiny scrap of vellum, perforated by worms and yellowed by sixteen centuries, but the writing is perfectly legible. It is written in Greek characters, which are almost microscopically minute, with scarlet initials. There are about 300 words.

It is certainly no part of any extant gospel, but its theological value must be left to theologians. It is unusually well written from a literary viewpoint. It begins in the middle of a speech. Jesus and His disciples have entered a temple and met a Pharisee, who rebukes them for omitting some ceremonial of ablution.

Jesus asks the Pharisee what the latter has done to comply with the ceremonial. The Pharisee's reply minutely describes the process of purification, of which no previous authority has given the details.

Then follows a powerful, eloquent denunciation by Jesus of mere outward purification, He saying that He and His disciples have been purified by the waters of life. There is also a mention of a hitherto unknown part of the temple called the Hegneuterian, or place of purification.

Theological circles are greatly interested in the discovery, which promises a sensation equal to that created by the Logia of Christ.

MINERS' WIVES RAID BANK.

Spectacular Run on Savings Institution When They Hear President is Ill.

Cumberland, Md.—Several hundred excited women caused a spectacular run on the Lonaconing Savings Bank at Lonaconing. The bank met all demands, keeping open after hours. Business men paid no attention to the alarm of the small depositors, one man depositing $1700 when the run was at its height.

It is thought the run was caused by the illness of its President, David Sloan, also President of the Maryland Bankers' Association, who is in Baltimore being treated for diabetes. The small depositors feared that his death might interfere with the bank. The women largely attend to business, their husbands being employed during the day in the mines.

SENIOR ROCKEFELLER ALIVE.

Frank Rockefeller Says His Father is Well Cared For.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"My father is alive, so far as I know, and I know pretty well," said Frank Rockefeller, brother of John D. Rockefeller. "If he died to-day I would hear of it immediately. Of course, I am not on good terms with John D. Rockefeller, but I do not think he told New York newspaper men that his father died before John D., Jr., was born."

It was suggested to Mr. Rockefeller that he might tell the residence of his father, but he refused to do so.

He had served as an ecclesiastic in the Church of England for more than half a century. Besides being a high churchman, the Rev. Bickersteth was an able and versatile writer and poet. He was the composer of the famous hymn, "Rock of Ages," which for years has been sung in churches of all creeds.

Burning 10,000 Freight Cars.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is burning up 10,000 old freight cars, which were in use on lines west of Pittsburg. The cars are of small capacity, worn out and were built long before the fast freight schedule came into effect. The iron is removed from them before they are thrown into the heap.

Remarkable Reception.

Cincinnati, O.—Caleb Powers, formerly secretary of state of Kentucky, was given a remarkable reception when he was taken from the Newport, Ky., jail to the station to be turned over to the state authorities at Georgetown for his fourth trial in connection with the murder of William Goebel, as ordered by the United States supreme court. His cell in the Newport jail was almost filled with flowers, the other prisoners in jail united in bidding him farewell, and farewell greetings were also exchanged with all the city, county and state officials in Newport. Accompanied by United States Marshal Orr and Jailer Ploeger, and with nothing to indicate the fact that he was a prisoner, Powers walked to the station, but before starting he expressed his belief that he would be given a fair trial, which he declared was all that he had asked.

Committed Suicide.

Norfolk, Va.—Irwin Tucker, president of the savings bank of Newport News, Va., committed suicide in his room over the bank in Newport News just as Chief of Police Reynolds, of that city, opened his door to arrest him upon a warrant charging him with defaulting in the sum of $10,000. Tucker heard Chief Reynolds ask a negro porter on the outside as to the location of his room and, standing in front of a mirror, put a bullet through his right temple as the door was thrown open.

The doors of the savings bank have been closed pending an investigation which is now being made by the board of directors.

Escapes Jail Before Execution Date.

Jackson, Miss.—A special from Port Gibson says J. E. Regan, a white man, condemned for the murder of Jason Moody, and awaiting execution set for Thursday, escaped from the jail at that place by sawing the bars of his cell and using a duplicate key on the outer door. No clue to his present location has been obtained, although large posses are engaged in the search. Great excitement prevails.

The condemned man undoubtedly had outside assistance and his relatives are under suspicion. Sheriff McGee was out of town at the time and the jail was in charge of Deputy McMurchy. There were only two other occupants of the jail, both negroes, and they refuse to talk.

The governor refused to commute Regan's sentence to life imprisonment.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The record for great blasts on railroad work in the south was broken at Shellmound, Tenn., on the Stevenson extension of the Southern railway. There were used 11,000 cans of powder, 150 cases of dynamite, costing between $6,000 and $7,000, and wiping off the earth in one minute a hill 75 feet high and 800 feet long. A thousand spectators saw the explosion, which was made by means of a battery. It will take a steam shovel a month working night and day to clear away the dirt, rocks and boulders removed by the explosion.

Hopeful of Mrs. Davis' Recovery.

New York.—Mrs. Jefferson Davis' condition was reported as greatly improved and it was said that she had spent the most comfortable night since her condition became serious. The family is now hopeful of a complete recovery.

Will Be Postponed Until May, 1907.

The Hague.—It is regarded here as practically assured that the second international peace conference will be postponed to the end of May, 1907.

KEEPING BEES IN THE ORCHARD.

We have our beehives in the orchard, as we found that both bees and fruit trees profited by this conjunction. It was thought that the bees were the offenders when we saw punctured and decayed fruit, but bees cannot and do not mar the skin of sound fruit. The depredators were found to be either birds or insects, or some other enemy, that did the damage first, and then the bees took their turn at the decayed fruit to extract the juices. The bees are the principal agents in carrying pollen from blossom to blossom, thus adding largely to the quality of the fruit.

These matters are becoming better understood and other beekeepers are realizing the value of keeping their hives in the orchard. The spraying of fruit trees should be done before the blossoms are open, as the poisonous liquids used to kill obnoxious insects can then do no other harm. The practice of spraying when the trees were in full bloom not only destroys the insects, but the honey bee as well, and does more harm than good. Failing an orchard, try a locust grove to keep the hives in or a buckwheat patch and fields of white clover to feed the bees.—American Agriculturist.

DUCKLINGS MORE PROFITABLE THAN CHICKS.

The saying often applied to ducks that "they eat more than they are worth" is no doubt a very unjust one. Any breeder raising the Pekin duck on a large scale will prove to you by actual experience that ducklings eat less in proportion to their growth than other poultry. Some of our readers may be a little surprised at this, but upon giving the matter a little thought they can readily understand the reason. It is because the ducklings reach maturity sooner than chicks and of course the longer it takes to raise a bird to maturity the greater the expense, not only of food but of time and trouble. Experiment has demonstrated the fact that with the same quantity of food and care ducklings in 70 days from the shell may be made with proper handling to weigh eight to ten pounds per pair, while chicks in the same length of time will only weigh from three to four pounds per pair. Hence this remark does not count, not applying to ducklings when properly and intelligently handled.—Western Fruit Grower.

BUTTER PRESERVATIVE.

Preserving butter sweet for a considerable time is one of the rare things to do. This method has been used with great success and is a first class preservative. It is inexpensive and easily prepared. Use two parts of the best common salt, one part sugar and one part saltpeter, beat them up together and blend the whole carefully. Take one ounce of this mixture, work it well into the mass and close it up for use. The butter thus cured should stand from three weeks to a month before it is used. The butter will be found sweet and nice.—M. A. Morehead, N. Webster, Ind.

THE IMPROVED FARM.

The man who has a farm that is continually improving is generally the man who makes a study of the fertilizing problem. He posts himself on all matters pertaining to soil improvement and knows only too well how the different leguminous crops will collect nitrogen and store it up for him in the soil; just what crops will supply the humus, etc., and practices a system of rotation that improves rather than impoverishes his land.

THE DRY BARNYARD.

While the paved barnyard is fine if one can afford it the expense is unnecessary if one is willing to use a little brains, a little muscle and considerable gravel. In the first place fill up the holes and get the yard level; then cart gravel until there is enough to pack the stuff down firmly from the center to the edges all around and have the gutters outside the barnyard fence.

A Change of Clothing.

Gustave Anderson, a prisoner in the Workhouse, died of pneumonia because of the rapid change to the prison suit from an enormous amount of clothing he wore when received. When told to disrobe he startled the guards by removing seven caps.

Then he added to their amazement by taking off six coats, two vests, five pairs of trousers, four shirts, and two undershirts. His shoes were stuffed with straw. Soon after he donned the Workhouse garb he was seized with pneumonia, which resulted in his death. He was sent to the Workhouse on the charge of vagrancy, and his home is not known.—Tucson (Arizona) Citizen.

AN OPTIMIST ON CROPS.

SHALL WE EVER HAVE ANOTHER HARVEST FAILURE?

The Secretary of Agriculture's Predictions as to the Future of American Grain Production and What the Grain Trade Thinks of Them.

A recent interview with Secretary of the Agricultural Department attracted considerable notice in the grain trade. In 1903, the trade had begun to predict disappearance of the United States from the list of wheat-exporting nations. Secretary Wilson, in the interview referred to, now declares that there will be no more "crop failures" of a general scope, and that "in 1910 the production per acre will be twice as great as it was in 1900."

The Secretary's interview was shown to a number of experienced members of the New York grain trade and their judgment solicited. It was the consensus of opinion that Secretary Wilson was decidedly optimistic. Some were inclined to think that the Secretary had been misquoted; indeed, many of the statements made in the interview in question are so rose-colored as to create skepticism.

Unquestionably crop results have in recent years been far more uniform and certain than they were previously. Primarily this improvement is attributable largely to the fact that great improvements have in late years been made in agricultural machinery. Wheat that is sown by a drilling machine to a depth of four inches or more is far better able to withstand the vicissitudes of weather than if it was sown broadcast by hand, according to the old-fashion method.

It it also manifest that farmers nearly everywhere are showing greater intelligence in their farm work, and there are many dealers who admit freely that Secretary Wilson deserves credit for the improvements along this line. The experiments made by scientific experts on behalf of the Department of Agriculture have doubtless been higaly beneficial to those farmers who have common sense enough to realize that in order to be profitable their farms must be conducted in a businesslike manner, as has been clearly demonstrated on the vast farms in the far West, where the work is supervised by capable men having accurate knowledge of what is required and a capacity to conduct affairs in a systematic way.

It has been clearly demonstrated by scientific investigation that the soil needs a rest now and then as well as animals and human beings, and it is also well known that soil is rested in a sense by sowing to grain of a different description. Thus farming has been made profitable even on lands that were formerly unproductive. There is a wide difference in the natural fertility of soils. Some do not produce well from the beginning unless particular attention is given to making them productive; others produce large crops for a short time, and then rapidly diminish in fertility; while still others, known as "strong soils," remain productive for many years without the giving of any attention to their fertility.

But even the strongest soils will wear out in time unless they are intelligently managed. It is perhaps little known, except to those directly interested, that plants in their growth make use of thirteen mineral elements, nine of which they secure directly from the soil. These are called the mineral plant feeds. They are: Phosphorus, potassium, calcium magnesium, sodium, iron, silicon, chlorine, and sulphur. The fact that one kind of grain consumes or makes use of certain of these chemicals while another makes use of different chemicals, shows why the constant sowing of one kind of grain will exhaust the supply of certain chemicals, whereas by frequent rotation the supply is not so quickly exhausted. It is especially worthy of note at this juncture that destruction by animal life is far more noticeable in fields where one kind of grain has been planted continuously for several seasons, showing that rotation is destructive to the chinch bug, Hessian fly, and other insects.

But notwithstanding the improvements cited, there are decidedly few experienced dealers who agree with Secretary Wilson that the yield per acre in 1910 will be twice as great as it was in 1900. The average production per acre should show important increase, inasmuch as in the past the yield has been entirely too small. In 1900 the average yield per acre was placed at 12.3 bushels, while in 1905 the average was approximately 14.5.

It hardly seems credible, however, that this can be increased in five years to 24 bushels, although it would cause no wonderment should the average be brought up to 20. This would not be considered a particularly high production in foreign countries. In the United Kingdom, for instance, the yield per acre is frequently over 30 bushels; in France about 20, Germany 28, Belgium 33, and Holland about 28. These comparatively large yields show beyond a doubt what can be done with old soil provided the ground is properly cultivated, and the right kind of fertilizers, etc., are used. It should be borne in mind at this juncture however, that a large percentage of our wheat is raised on soil that is either nearly virgin or has little if any fertilizer in it. This would suggest that many fields in old or eastern States that are now idle or used only for grazing might be made to produce good crops if properly tilled and well manured.—New York Post.

PORFIRIO DIAZ.

Mexico's Ruler as an Englishwoman Sees Him.

Mrs. Alec Tweedie has had the assistance of uncompromising enthusiasm in her effort to become the biographer of the Mexican President. To her Diaz is "the greatest man of last century." He is, at all events, a very remarkable personality. Born the son of an innkeeper of Indian blood, he soon showed signs of an adventurous and determined disposition; and in boyhood traveled two hundred miles to join the revolutionists, found himself too late and went back to study law. Later on he entered the military ranks during the civil war and won his way step by step to regimental command by the age of 30.

The coming of the Austrian Maximilian was hotly resented by Diaz, who, imprisoned by the French supporters of the European ruler, refused to be led forth to meet him. By and by he had his revenge. He escaped in exciting circumstances and kept the flag of revolt flying in southern Mexico. Puebla presently fell before his arms and Mexico City surrendered to him. Diaz loyally gave the city to the Republican Government of Juarez and retired to the neighborhood of his birthplace, until the spirit of revolution, which seems perpetually latent or loose in Southern American politics, upset the power of Juarez.

Diaz felt he was the man for the hour; and quietly presented himself at the capital November 23, 1876. "Next day he made his triumphal entry into the city and rode up to the palace, where he established himself practically for life." For nearly thirty years the authority of the able and courageous ruler has remained unmoved. His regular reelection to the Presidential office has become a commonplace of history. The enormous territory under his strong and faithful control has reaped a hundred benefits. From anarchy its political and social conditions have passed to those of prosperity and peace.

He is a personal ruler, refusing himself to none, and giving attention to any credited applicant. Mrs. Tweedie claims to speak from her own knowledge of his character, and finds him "calm, quiet, reserved, strong, determined, thoughtful and far seeing." An uncrowned king, he offers to the world the amazing spectacle of a South American republic apparently firmly established on the ashes of continual civil conflict; an autonomy without a tyrant. Diaz has, we learn, sanctioned the writing of this biography, and assisted the author by lending her his private diaries. Mrs. Tweedie's choice of subject has made her the historian of a distinctive epoch in the progress of Western liberty and democracy and of a striking public career.—London Globe.

THESE BULLETS DO NOT KILL.

Paris Invention That Permits Practice With Human Targets.

Walter Winans, the American marksman, describes tests made in Paris with a new patent bullet which hits, but does not kill. The invention promises to revolutionize rifle and revolver practice.

The bullet, which was invented by Dr. Deirilers, is hollow, and can be used several times. Mr. Winans and several others practiced with it with one another under dueling conditions. The pistols used were furnished with steel guards resembling a sword hilt, to protect the hands, because the bullet, although it does not penetrate the clothing will wound the naked flesh. All wore motor goggles.

Two hundred and seventy-two shots were fired and 202 hits were recorded. Mr. Winans and Commandant Fereus made full scores, finally shooting each other over the heart.

Frenchmen regard such practice as splendid training for dueling, as the experience of firing at and being fired at by a living opponent has unique value, it being totally different from aiming at a target. Men who never missed a target were quite disconcerted at first when the opponent's arm was raised to fire.

It is necessary to observe the rules not to aim at the face and keep the pistol raised until both men have fired. One of the combatants inadvertently lowered his pistol and received his opponent's bullet in his thumb, compelling a surgical operation.—London correspondence New York

A Woman's Way.

A ward patient in Roosevelt Hospital grew gradually weaker without any apparent reason.

"She's fretting herself to death about something," said the nurse. "If she would confide in me I think she would get better."

By and by the patient did open her mind and heart.

"If I could only see myself," she wailed "I'd feel different. I know I must look like death, or you'd let me have a looking glass."

It was against the rules to supply patients in that ward with mirrors, but the nurse, recognizing the gravity of that particular case, smuggled in a small hand-glass. The result was miraculous.

"Why, dear me," said the sick woman, "I don't look half so bad as I supposed I did."

And from that hour she began to improve.

SINGING AT SALEM.

Editor Union:

I wonder how many have read the notice in The Union inviting the people to the annual singing at Salem. If they will notice, it invites only those who are interested in the song service, and not those who term it a picnic. It also says, "Bring your books and baskets." Now listen. I have talked to some of the people of Salem, and they say they have had about as much of the disorderly conduct as they care to endure, and they say positively that they are not going to be imposed on at this meeting as they have in the past. They are tired feeding a crowd of drunken "rowdies and boys" that come for no other purpose save that of drinking whisky, acting disorderly and getting their dinner. I have heard some of the Salem people say that they are not going to bring dinner for any such drunken crowd, and if they attempt to intrude that they will be asked to stand back, for the dinner was not intended for them any way. I want to say from what I have heard that if a fellow gets his dinner at Salem this time he will have to take it with him, and who could blame the people at Salem? Now, boys, if you go and expect anything to eat, carry it with you. And whisky sellers look out, for it may be a warm day for you, too.

CIVIL WEEK AT COURT.

Last week had a few cases of general interest. Geo. B. Dobson vs. L. & N. R. R. won his case, the jury giving him a verdict for $5,000. Lee Kicker vs. John Vinson and John Mims; the defendants won out. Thos. Baker got a verdict against W. J. Gragg for $62.50. The Edward Thompson Co. got a verdict against T. A. Curry for $451.92. The cases of G. W. Wilson vs. W. A. Mims and G. W. Gore vs. C. M Littleton were continued for settlement F. A. Gulledge vs. G. F. Harris; case dismissed, plaintiff paying costs. W. R. Lowery vs. Z. S. Avery; the jury gave a verdict for Lowery, giving him the land sued for and $50 for damages; a new trial is asked for.

CRIMINAL WEEK AT COURT.

The entire panel of thirty-two jurors answered to their names Monday morning, but Newt. Childress, M. W. Latham and W. J. Fiquitt were excused. The Ed McCullough case was continued by the State. The case against John Vinson and John Mims was nolle prossed. Oat Headley was convicted of "disturbing religious worship" and fined $50. Tom Jones, charged with "assault and battery," acquitted. C. L. Branch plead guilty to "assault and battery," fined $75. Joel Fulmer plead guilty to selling liquor," fined quor, fined $50. Durwood Broadhead was fined $10 and Thomas M. Barnett $25. Jeff Shelton, colored, was convicted of "manslaughter" and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary. The grand jury has examined a great many witnesses and found a few bills so far, and will likely adjourn by Thursday morning. Their report will be published in full in next week's Union.

LIBERTY HILL.

Allow me space to enter in and chat awhile. I thank "Papa's Pet" for kind invitation to write. Health of this community is good. Rev. A. L. Foshee filled his regular appointment here Sunday and delivered an excellent sermon to a large and attentive congregation. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. We've almost sixty scholars enrolled, and more coming. The singing at T. P. Smith's Sunday evening was well attended and proved a success. Messrs. W. G. C., Z. L., R. W. L. and E. B., with the best of company, attended the singing Miss Abbie Lowery was the welcome guest of Miss Dovie Smith Sunday. Some of our young people are talking of going to the all-day singing at Salem next Sunday, and I hope they'll have a nice time. J. F. Hayes and wife and W. J. Headley were visitors at T. P. Smith's Sunday. C. Sharbutt and family, of Mt. Pleasant, visited W. J. Dennis Sunday.

"HOWDY."

WYLAM.

Well, here I am, with very little to write, but if I could see some of my Chilton friends I could talk a sight. Arnold Riggins, of Smithfield, was here on business Wednesday. Mrs. Maud Bradley, of Thomas, was here Thursday. Thursday is always a busy day in Wylam, for it is ration day for the union men. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Gilbert are proud parents; it's a boy. Mr. Wagoner is on the sick list, but we hope for his speedy recovery. The school children are all smiles, enjoying a concert for the last three nights of school. Mr. and Mrs. James Garrett are gone to Athens, Ga., to visit his parents, who are right sick. Mrs. J. L. Mitchell was in Wylam Tuesday. We'll be glad when the Baptist "protracted meeting" starts, as it is near us and we sure will attend. J. L. Mitchell gave a call on H. C. Maddox's family Saturday, and says he likes Bessemer fine. Mrs. H. C. Maddox, Mrs. George Sowell and Mr. and Mrs. Bob Hardy visited A. Riggins' family Sunday, and report a nice time. With best wishes to The Union editor and readers, I still am, PAPA'S PET.

LIBERTY HILL.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space for the first time to say a few words. Some of our farmers are done chopping cotton, and we're needing rain. Rev. A. L. Foshee filled his regular appointment here Saturday and Sunday. On Sunday he preached a missionary sermon, and a large crowd attended. There was a big singing at T. P. Smith's Sunday evening, and it was more than a success. I think S. W. will soon have to hunt him a new road to travel. Robert Littlejohn is electioneering; guess you all know what for. Success to all.

"TIGE."

JEMISON.

Dear Editor:

Allow me a small space in your paper. It has so many good pieces from the boys about politics that I love to read. "Just a Voter" must have decided that he wouldn't run for an office, for if any one wants an office now is the time for him to put his name before the people, as the Republican and Populist committees have met and arranged for the primary. Say, I was down in Clanton not long ago, and I went into the Probate office and Judge Reynolds was out, so I got in his chair and set there and turned around in it, and thought to myself: If I only had an office like this and a good clerk to attend to business while I was out it would be grand. But I knew there wasn't a chance for any one to make any improvement on the way Judge Reynolds has conducted the office since he has had it. Just see the improvements in the court house and jail, and then he got the prisoners' wages raised from $4.50 per month and working twelve hours per day to $35 per month and only have to work eight hours per day. I feel that the prisoners must be thankful to the judge, as well as we folks, for this good piece of work of his. Say, I'd like to have an office, but I'd rather be appointed by the Governor. They get fatter and look better than those that get elected. I guess the reason is the strain of the campaign and the office work, though our people all work, in office or out of it. So you see, boys, in order to get an appointed office we'll have to elect a Governor of our kind. I hear there is going to be several out for Sheriff, but I can't hear of any one wanting to be Representative. "Just a Voter," you must be out for Sheriff. I hope you are, for I want to vote for you. Well, set the people's ball to rolling and as it comes along we'll all give it a boost, until our majority in the county is the biggest ever. We boys are all coming.

A FARM HAND.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

Good health, fine weather, and all seem to be as happy as a red pig in the sunshine. The several pieces in The Union about music reminds me of our jolly farmer boys as they go marching to their work and whistling a merry song. Give us the man who sings at his work. He will do more in the same time, he'll do it better and will persevere longer. On is scarcely sensible of fatigue whilst he marches to music. The merry stars are said to make harmony as they revolve in their spheres. Wonderful is the strength of cheerfulness; altogether past calculation its powers of endurance and efforts to be permanently useful. State Business Agent Parker, of the F. E. & C. U. of A., addressed the people of this place last Friday night. J. J. Culp and family visited in Pleasant Grove Saturday and Sunday. Come on "Farmer Boy;" you preach sound doctrine; and let me congratulate "Leander" in last week's Union. His letter was brimful of sound sense. In fact, all are good. Did you ever read as good a paper as The Union? I think not. Why don't you subscribe, then? Success to you all.

"JUST A SUBSCRIBER."

CENTER POINT.

Health of the community, except a few cases of measles, and those that have not had them seem to be very careful about where they go. Well, how glad we are when The Union, our county paper, comes, so we can get the news from all over the county; and how we love to read the letters from the different correspondents. Cotton chopping is all the go, and we are needing a shower to make things grow faster, but we trust in an Allwise Providence, and work along just the same. R. J. Langston has moved near us, but in his old home county, Chilton, and says he feels like he had got back home, and I guess he is settled for the balance of his life. We all know he is outspoken for the people's cause and stands for "equal rights to all, and special privileges to none," and we therefore gladly welcome him back to Chilton. Well, we see where they are having all-day singings at different places over our county, and we sure would love to go to all of them, for how we do love to sing. We hear that there will be about ten candidates for Sheriff, but we don't know who will land the job. J. O. and Houston Dickinson are expected home in a few days now from school at Troy. Our saw mill has picked up and moved down on Swift Creek. With best wishes for the success of The Union and its many readers, I am still C. W. L.

CLANTON, ALA.

Editor Union:

I thought I wouldn't write any more for a while, as my crop was getting grassy and I hadn't the time, but when I saw that piece in the Banner about the convicts it liked to have paralyzed me, for I didn't know how they were managed and who got the benefit of their work. But when I saw Judge Reynolds' piece in The Union I found out who got it. I wish every voter in the county would read that "Citizen" piece and Judge Reynolds' reply to it. But didn't "Citizen" strike the keynote when he said the commissioners were good and religious men? Yes, buddy, we Populists and Republicans never elect any but good and religious men to office. Maybe "Citizen" is a good and religious man, after reading his piece in the Banner, I imagine I can hear him pray every night before he retires—praying to the dear people to give him and his crowd office. "Oh, dear people, give us an office, just any kind will do. If you haven't got enough to go round, please let us run for some old man's place, and when he dies let the Governor appoint us. Yes, dear people, let us get in any way we can. We know it looks bad for us to be begging for Morgan and Pettus' place before they die, but, dear people, you know they are old men and that they ought to die and let some of us have their places. Oh dear and good people, please turn these Populists and Republicans out here at home and let us have their places, for you know we won't work, and we won't do anything when we are out of office but run around and look wise and talk about those that hold office. Oh, dear people, we love you, especially when we want office. You know we love everybody, for when Roosevelt passed through here we run all over ourselves to get close to him. Yes, we'll act the hypocrite; we'll do and say anything to get office. We'll be Pops, Republicans, Democrats or any kind of 'crats to get office. Yes, dear people, we know we're not fit to hold office, but then we're not fit for anything else." Yes, I expect "Citizen" is a good fellow, and I suspect when he prays like that that tears are rolling down his cheeks in lumps as big as a barrel. You know those kind of fellows cry easily. Say, I was at the Populist and Republican meeting Saturday a week ago, and I'd put on my new clothes, and I stood round and looked wise, and I wanted some one to say a word about me; but no. Felix Fitts, Frank Goodgame, Jim Grant and Dock Gentry could get up all kind of talk about being a candidate, and there was me, a better looking man than any of them. Nothing was said about me. Say, we Democrats will have a nice time at our mass meeting when it is called. We'll all be there, or most of the smart ones will. Of course some few Democrats will kick over about beat 8 and say that they were too far away to come, but when we nominate our ticket we'll just pat them on the back and thy'll fall in line and support it as they've done in the past. Of course, we folks in Clanton will have the advantage of those that live away from here, as more of us can be here; but we Clanton folks ought to have the most, for we are the best qualified to nominate a ticket. I tell you we're smart folks in Clanton. If Solomon was to wake up among us he'd feel like a fool among us smart folks, so you see we Clanton folks must control the mass meeting, so as there won't be any mistake about who we nominate.

JUST A VOTER.

LOMAX.

J. H. Jackson is in feeble health at present. He is one of the firm of Aldridge & Jackson and also the sawyer and skilled machinist, and his labor is badly needed at the Lomax mill. Jesse Hayes and wife, J. A. Baker and daughters, Misses Thula and Mary, attended the singing at Jackson's Chapel Sunday evening. Prof. L. D. Riggins visited A. A. Jackson's Sunday, and also was at the singing. Elder John A. Dykes, of Shelby, will preach at Jackson's Chapel on the fourth Sunday and Saturday before at 11 a. m. There will be singing at 9 a. m. on Sunday in the old "Sacred Harp." All singers are invited. We should never forget the old "Songs of Zion" that our forefathers and mothers sang in days that are past and gone. We should teach our children to sing all religious songs, both old and new. The person that has the love of God in their heart loves a religious song. We have an organized singing, which meets every first and third Sundays at 2 p. m. and sings in both old and new books. We invite all lovers of music to these singings. We hope the grand jury will find bills against all the violators of law, especially the prohibition law. All laws should be enforced and the violators punished. The good people of this county should do all in their power to stop this illegal sale of liquor and public drunkenness. Let us all do our best to enforce all laws, and especially the prohibition law. Success to The Union and its cause.

"OBSERVER."

THORSBY.

W. N. Hornsby, of Luverne, Ala., was in town last Wednesday. Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Sundell left Monday evening for Jamestown, N. Y., where they expect to reside. Mr. G. W. Phalin returned to Pearson Thursday. Miss Hagenson, of Birmingham, visited friends here last week. Mrs. Thorson came down from Chicago Friday for a few days' visit. She returned home Monday evening. Her son, W. Thorson, accompanied her to Chicago. Mrs. Marv Raspberry visited with relatives from Saturday until Monday. Mr. Kaufman, of Montgomery, transacted business in town Tuesday. Dr. and Mrs. Stabler are proud parents of a baby boy. Charles Howard went to Birmingham Monday, returning the same day. A number of friends surprised Mr. Magne Anderson the first of the week, and all had a pleasant time. Sunday school teachers' meeting will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Colyer Friday evening. Prof. Hix made a trip to Birmingham the latter part of last week. Mrs. Stabler is visiting with her son, Dr. Stabler, and family. Mrs. M. Carr has been visiting with friends and relatives at Birmingham. Messrs. Hanson and Howard are shipping quite a number of flowers from "Carnation Farm" this week. The game of ball was a decided victory for Thorsby, the score being 8 to 21. A few of the Clanton ladies were up to see the game, and there were a good many who were "lookers on" here, too. John M. Lund, of Bridgeport, Conn., representing the Remington Typewriter Company, was in town Tuesday. Mr. Lund is originally from Sweden, and was very much pleased to find some of his countrymen here, and likes the place real well. R. Brandt brought in some fine cherries the other day which he had grown. Messrs. Andrew Franzen, P. C. Smith and others also have cherries, and they seem to do well here. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, of Jemison, attended services here Sunday morning. Mrs. Gandy, of Pell City, visited friends here Saturday. Mrs. Patterson, of Tennessee, visited with Mr. J. J. Stanley and family from Tuesday until Friday of last week. She went from here to Wetumpka. Mrs. J. J. Stanley and Pauline accompanied her and expected to be gone for two or three weeks. J. M. Bazard and son, Ed, left for Taladega Tuesday morning. B. F. Knapp, of Chicago, is spending a few days here. Rev. Beal will preach here next Sunday evening. Mr. A. L. Tornblom, of Chicago, spent a few days here this past week. The boys of the baseball team will hold a box social and ice cream supper at the public school house in Thorsby Saturday evening, May 26. The affair is for the benefit of the baseball team. Every one is invited to come. The ladies are requested to bring boxes which will be auctioned off. Ernie Hanson made a trip to Birmingham Wednesday.

ANON.

PROVIDENCE, BEAT 10.

Our Sunday school is progressing finely, and we have had a little series of meetings conducted by our pastor, W. W. Robinson. He had a large attendance every service, and I don't think I ever saw more interest manifested in a service. Surely that Christian affection prevailed. We had a number of visitors, and I am sure every one felt better for having been present.

NATIONAL GAME.

Fred Parent is in much better form than last season, which means considerable to the Boston Club.

Outside of Jimmy Collins and Grimshaw, none of the Boston regulars is hitting at a respectable clip.

On the form he has displayed this season Turner will push the best shortstops in his league for leading honors.

Gilbert, second baseman, is hitting with more success than he has since he became a member of the champions.

The Philadelphias lead the American League in team batting with the big average of .304. The New Yorks are fourth.

Southpaw John Lush, of the Phillies, has the honor of pitching the first hitless and runless game of 1906 in the major leagues.

Connie Mack is said to have a watchful eye on Skillen, the crack Dartmouth pitcher. Mack is after Hoey, the Holy Cross outfielder.

According to the Cleveland players Rossman, substitute first baseman for the Naps, is one of the best coachers in the business.

CIRCUIT COURT DOCKET.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Spring term of our court opened Monday, with Judge S. L. Brewer presiding. The judge's charge to the grand jury was a good one, and went straight to the heart of the matter, for as he very truly said, if a juror observes his oath with fidelity he does his duty to himself and his country. His honor complimented Chilton county on the improvements in the court house and jail (particularly the jail). Bank Your Saving's With a Safe Bank.

Every man, woman and child, no matter where they live, should have a savings account with the Citizens' Savings bank of Birmingham, for the following reasons:

It is the only bank of importance in the state which confines its banking business strictly to savings accounts and accepts no commercial business. The banking laws of Alabama provide that where a bank doing both a savings and general banking business becomes insolvent, the depositors who had not stipulated for interest (commercial) will have preference over those who had their money in the bank for savings—in other words, the savings depositors can't be paid a cent until the commercial depositors have been paid in full.

We take no trade risks; all our loans are made on first class improved real estate mortgages or other gilt-edge collateral security—our motto being "The strength of a bank is in its individual loans."

These things, backed up by our cash capital and responsibility of our board of directors and the long and successful experiences of our officers in the banking business, renders this bank as safe as United States bonds.

Bank with us by mail. It is easy and safe. Write for information.

ARISETH THE MULE

LONG-EARED ONE ELOQUENTLY PRAISES HIS RACE.

Present and Future Value and Past Achievements the Subject of a Short Talk—The Discoverer of Coeur d'Alene Mines.

"Halt, you busy people of this world and think of me for a while. I have been keeping my big ears open for years and years and I have listened to everything I have had a chance to hear and I think I have paid pretty courteous attention at that. I admit I am balky now and then, but what more could you expect from one who has been forced to listen all his life to the plaudits of everybody and everything else and very seldom ever hears anything commendatory of himself. Now, if you please, I should like your attention for a little while, so that I can sound some of my own praises and let you all know how important I really am."

Thus spoke a mule. He had taken a position in front of a batch of animals at one of the stock yards trading marts and insisted on saying his say so forcibly that the owner gave way so long as the prospective purchaser refrained from kicking and the mule seemed as if he might cut up a little in that line himself. The mule then proceeded:

"While the draft horse, carriage and saddle horses have their purpose, and perform them nobly and are in increasing demand, there is no doubt that in these prosperous times there is a great demand for animals like me. We are becoming more popular in places where a few years ago we were not used, and so the demand is increasing for us as work animals to take the place of horses.

"The big public improvements call for more of us and the development of the south is taking more of us right along. The farmers who are in a position to raise a few of us each year cannot make any mistake by breeding us.

"The mule has been tried in many ways and seldom found wanting. In addition to our wonderful powers of endurance we have shown both patience and obedience, and we have borne our burden well under the most torrid conditions.

"It costs about $35 to raise one of us ready for market, and find a ready sale at three years old if of good size, at prices ranging from $150 to $250 singly, and for good, matched pairs sales have taken place lately as high as $1,000 a pair.

"The mule has been until lately essentially a Kentucky and Missouri product, but the breeders and farmers of the middle and western states have had their eyes opened to our value by the demand and quality required and purchased by the agents of the British government, who came over from the old sod, their pockets bulging with banknotes, and purchased everything in sight with long ears.

"We rendered great railroad service in the Boer war and without us England never would have hushed the song of the Boer bullets, crushed the Boers and claimed the Transvaal. England should erect in perpetual memory a monument in gratitude for the services we have rendered.

"Let me tell a story of the discovery of the famous Coeur d'Alene mines. They were discovered by pure luck. A man leant his mule to two prospectors. In the course of their wanderings the mule was tied to a tree, and, becoming impatient, pawed the ground and uncovered a lead vein, which is now the site of a famous mine. The owner of the mule sued for a third interest in the claim and the courts granted it to him, stating that as the mule had made the discovery and that as he was its owner he was entitled to the mule's share.

"The three owners sold their discovery for $500,000 any and nothing was too good for that mule for the rest of his days. He was exhibited in a private car and lived on the fat of the land and now a tombstone marks his grave. His harness hangs in a noted resort, where it is gazed upon with deepest reverence by the old-time prospectors.

"Our importance never has been fully recogized, but lately agricultural shows in several states have hung out money for mule exhibits upon a plane equal to our importance and intrinsic value.

"Thanking you, one and all, I am now ready to be sold."—Chicago News.

HAWTHORNE'S DESK IN MUSEUM.

Pittsfield, Mass., Has Interesting Relic of Author.

One very interesting relic of Nathaniel Hawthorne's short residence in Lenox is in the Berkshire athenaeum in Pittsfield, Mass. It is the old-fashioned desk on which Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and "Tanglewood Tales," during his occupancy of the "Little Red House," from the early summer of 1850 to the winter of 1851.

It is an upright desk and bookcase of mahogany. It has a fold-over shelf to write on, with small drawers for pens and papers and commodious drawers beneath the writing shelf.

This desk was obtained and presented to the Berkshire athenaeum by ex-Congressman Frank W. Rockwell and John M. Stevenson of Pittsfield, who in the summer of 1877 recovered the desk in Lenoxdale.

On the door to the bookcase is a fine engraving of Hawthorne framed in a piece of wood taken from a window casing of Hawthorne's little Lenox residence, which was burned on June 22, 1890.

Habits of Savage Tribes.

The habit of snuff taking has been confirmed among savage tribes for past ages. In South Africa it is used among Swazis, Basutos and Matabeles. Every Zulu to-day, even in towns, carries a little square box suspended around his neck by a piece of string or gut, and the snuff spoon (for they do not indulge in the homely "pinch") carved out of sheep's bone, often ornamented with intricate geometrical designs, and for convenience carried hanging downward through a slit in the lobe of the ear. The Zulu regards the lobe of his ear as a useful receptacle for various small articles he meets with. The umfaan, or houseboy, universally met with in Natal, has a penchant for safety pins, which have to be carefully hidden from his sharp eyes; even then he is usually to be seen, after going through the rooms, with a string of these pins suspended from each ear until they reach his shoulders.

A Novelty in Watch Dials.

Major-General Baden Powell of Mafeking fame, and the author of more than one valuable handbook on military matters, is responsible for an invention illustrated herewith, which scarcely needs description. It appeals alike to the shortsighted civilian and the soldier employed on night scouting. According to one of the most fashionable jewelers in London, a number of eminent military and naval officers have had the "B-P" dial adapted to their chronometers.

Foot as a Measure of Length.

Some very interesting facts have lately been collected about the foot, the most widely used measure of length in modern times. The measure is derived from the length af the human foot, but apparently has varied more than that portion of the skeleton can possibly have done in historic times. The ancient Welsh foot, for instance, was nine inches long, whereas the Piedmont foot was twenty inches. In modern times it has varied from the Spanish foot of less than eleven inches, to the Venice foot, of more than thirteen inches. Almost every country has used a foot measure of a different length. It was this confusion which led the French to devise the metric system.

Tenants for 145 Years.

Mr. Reynolds of Little Saling, Sussex, who is 81 years of age, has lived all his life in the same house, in which also his father and grandfather had lived.

The period covered by the three tenancies is 145 years. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds have recently celebrated their golden wedding.—Diet and Drama.

TREASURE THROWN UP BY SEA.

Lump of Gold and Silver Fused Found on Oregon Beach.

A large piece of silver bullion washed up on the coast of Newport, Ore., has set agog the imagination of the dinizens of that storm-swept neighborhood, and the days of Spanish galleons laden with wealth and the ocean piracies of primitive America are recalled.

J. G. Crawford, an Albany photographer and scientist, is the discoverer of the wealth disgorged by the ocean.

While searching for rare specimens of animal and mineral life that are to be found on the Oregon coast during the winter months Crawford ran across a large piece of mixed silver and gold, symetrically shaped as if the two metals had run together in a vessel of some kind.

Speculation as to the source of the rare find was immediately rife, but that it came from the depths of the ocean is the only certain information obtainable.

The fact that the two metals are melted together as if they had been thrown into a kettle or some such receptacle would indicate that it is not from some of the wrecks of wealth laden ships of recent days. Few miners of today would run their gold and silver together in a single vessel.

An old miner estimated that the find is worth several hundred dollars. Crawford will have it assayed.—New York Herald.

Cane With a History.

The workmen now engaged in tearing away the old Baptist church building found a walking cane secreted in one of the pews, which shows considerable service, but is in a fine state of preservation.

The stick is beautifully carved, having leaves, trees, birds, fish and various quadrupeds carved thereon, and a Masonic emblem near the head. It also contains the following inscription:

"Thomas Jefferson of Va., born Apr. 13, 1743; was President U. S. A. 1801 to 1809; wrote Declaration of Independence; founder University Va.

"Jefferson's dying words: 'I resign my spirit to God, my daughter to my country.'

"Died July 4, 1826. This cane was cut near Jefferson's tomb.—Hartsville County Messenger.

Meanest Man Found.

W. Westlake of Chicago refused yesterday in the superior court to allow $1.40 of the estate of his grandmother, Mrs. Arabella Dinsmore of Redding, to be expended on a tombstone for her grave.

There was just $96.46 left in the estate. A score or more of heirs, with the exception of Westlake, agreed to expend the entire sum for a tombstone to the memory of Mrs. Dinsmore. Westlake insisted on having his share of the estate delivered to him in coin, and the court so ordered.

Westlake will receive $1.40 and each of his eight children 30 cents, making a total of $3.80. The monument will be erected by the remaining heirs, who relinquished their estate claims.—Los Angeles Times.

Practice Versus Preaching.

When the French Academy of Medicine, which is foremost in teaching hygiene, recently gave up possession of its ancient meeting room, the carpet, worn and heavy with the dust of ages, was taken up.

To the surprise of the workmen, another carpet, still more ragged and grimy, came into view; under this was still another, below that a fourth, and so till ten layers of moldering carpet had been removed.

Pursued by Ill Fortune.

Col. H. B. Maxon of Reno, Nev., has survived a great deal of misfortune. Within the last three years he has fallen down a mining shaft, breaking both legs; been knocked across a Los Angeles street by an automobile; has been in three railroad wrecks; participated in an automobile smash-up in Salt Lake City, and not long ago was trampled nearly to death by some horses.

GID SMALLEY IN HARD LUCK.

Sage of Bingville Must Lose His Much Prized Whiskers.

While down to Hen Wethersby's store tother ev'g, Gid Smalley had a axident to happen to him which disfigured his whiskers considerable. Gid has long whiskers and he is terrible proud of them. Gid was smoking a corncob pipe at the time and exidentally when he stuffed the tobacco in his pipe he stuffed some of the whiskers in along with the tobacco by mistake. When he lit up and begin to smoke everybody who was setting near him got up and walked away and asked him what the durnashion he was smoking that has such a oderiferous odor to it. Gid said he was smoking plug as usual and then suddenly Ranse Hillyer yelled, "Your whiskers is on fire, Gid!" and Gid throwed down his pipe and grabbed his whiskers in his hands and burnt his hands but he smothered out the blaze but not until his whiskers had been burnt half off. Gid now says as soon as it gets warm enough he is going to have all his whiskers cut off as much as he hates to.—"Bingville Bugle" items in the Boston Post.

HARE CARRIED OFF TREASURE.

Clever "Pussy" Feigned Death and Escaped with Wealth.

A delightful story comes from County Donegal, Ireland. Timothy O'Donnell is a farmer, living on the bleak slope of a mountain south of Glenties. Recently a son in America sent him home a bill—value $25—and Timothy sent his daughter to Glenties to cash it, buy goods, and bring back the change. The colleen discharged her mission, and for want of a purse tied up the change in a handkerchief. On her way back she proceeded to examine some traps which her father had seen on the mountain side, and was delighted to find in one of them a splendid hare. But then the question arose, how was she to kill it? She had neither stick nor stone. Happy though, why not strangle it with her handkerchief? No soon said than done, or attempted, and "pussy" was left for dead. The girl proceeded to set the trap again. But the hare was only feigning death; and when the girl looked round, imagine her astonishment to see it scampering over the mountain side with the handkerchief (containing the treasure) fastened round his neck!! Pursuit was, of course, impossible, and hare and money soon disappeared from view.

Giant Was Able to Wade.

Henry Meyer, a seven-foot-four giant of Hoboken, N. J., saved a man from drowning the other day by wading into water so deep that an ordinary individual would have had to swim, and holding the frenzied man above water until help arrived.

Chinese Soldiers.

Athletic sports borrowed from the white races are popular with the modern army of China. The sketch by a French artist shows them trying the pole vault.

"Dust Devils" of White Nile Valley.

Travelers in the celebrated Death Valley of California have described the wonderful contortions of the sand pillars that small whirlwinds sometimes send spinning across the hot plain. Even more remarkable are "dust devils," seen by an explorer in the valley of the White Nile. Sometimes two of these whirling columns, gyrating in opposite directions, meet, "and if they be well matched the collision stops them and a struggle ensues as to which way they shall twist. Gradually one gains the mastery, and the two combined rush on together." Some of these whirlwinds will strip the clothes from an Arab's back, or send a goat spinning round and round like a top.

Sunday-School Attendance Record.

The four children of Mr. E. Hallworth, jeweler, of Great Harwood, England, have created a unique record by their remarkable attendance at the Congregational Sunday-school in that town, for a period totaling fifty-one years. There was only one solitary absence during that time, that being on account of illness. Alice Ann, the oldest daughter, aged twenty-one, has never missed for fifteen years, and Clara, aged eighteen, James, aged sixteen, and Archibald, aged thirteen, have respectively a record of twelve, thirteen, and eleven years' unbroken attendance.

INSPIRATION CAME IN FROLIC.

Chopin's Funeral March Composed Under Strange Circumstances.

Many people have heard the "Marche Funebre" of Chopin, but few are aware that it had its origin in a rather ghastly after-dinner frolic.

The painter Ziem, still living in hale old age, relates how, some fifty-six years ago, he had given a little Bohemian dinner in his study, which was divided by hangings into three sections. In one of these was a skeleton sometimes used by Ziem for "draping," and an old piano covered with a sheet.

During the after-dinner fun Ziem and the painter Ricard crept into this section, and wrapping the old sheet like a pall around the skeleton carried it among their comrades, where Polignac seized it, and wrapping himself with the skeleton in the sheet sat down to play a queer dance of death at the wheezy old piano.

In the midst of it all, Chopin, who was of the party, was seized with an inspiration, and, seating himself at the piano with an exclamation that brought the roysterers to their senses, extemporized them and there the famous "Marche Funebre," while his Bohemian auditory applauded in frantic delight.—Montreal Herald.

NOT HOMELIEST MAN IN STATE.

Bet that Was Easy Money for New Hampshire Man.

In the summer of 1858 or 1860 there came to the town of Wolfboro, N. H., a circus, an unusual occurrence, which brought to the old brick schoolhouse grove many of the townspeople and those from the outlying country. From Tuftonboro came one Nathaniel Burke, the tallest, thinnest, most angular and disjointed of men, with cross eyes, unkept light hair and beard. He had long, bony hands and feet, and ill-fitting home-made clothes. He could double himself up with perfect ease.

The proprietor of the circus saw him, and was so interested that he questioned him, saying finally: "I will bet $10 you are the very homeliest man in this state."

Nat replied, in his slow, dronelike way, after relieving himself of an old pipe and changing his quid of tobacco to the other side of his mouth: "I'll take yer bet."

He went away and later produced his brother Joe. The circus proprietor looked Joe over, and then Nat, and finally, turning to his clerk, said: "Pay this man $10," and the crowd cheered Nat.

Latest in Railways.

Hochstauffen, near Bad Reichenhall, in Germany, will soon have one of the most peculiar railways in the world. It will run up a steep mountain side, and will be operated by a balloon. The mountain is so steep that no ordinary way of locomotion would do, so it has been planned to hitch a balloon to the car that makes the up trip, and have it practically lift the car to the top of the hill. But the car will be held to the earth by clamps that will retain the wheels close to the rails, and the upward tendency of the balloon will furnish the power. The big bag of gas will be 67 feet in diameter, and will have a lifting capacity of about 10,000 pounds.

Scallop Fishers in Union.

A scallop union is the latest combination of labor. The scallop fishermen of Bar Harbor, Maine, are going to unite in order to control the price of the shellfish that are brought to that port. This action was decided upon because the selling price has been so low that it has scarcely paid to bring the catches to market.

Paper Machines Work Rapidly.

Some of the large paper machines of the country supply a stream of paper at the rate of a mile in ten minutes. Great difficulty is experienced when this sheet of paper breaks, for the broken shreds come so fast that the room is filled before the machine can be stopped.

Perpetual Calendar Will Keep Track of All Engagements.

A perpetual calendar, which serves as a daily reminder, is a recent patent of a Baltimore man. It is made of stiff cardboard, in five strips, upon which are printed the days of the month, beginning with 1 and ending with 31. Each strip except the last one, has seven numbers, representing the days of the week. The numbers are not printed directly on the cardboard, but on slips which are pasted on the lower edges only, in order that spaces between the rows may be adapted for the retention of slips of paper bearing memoranda of various kinds. The upper edges being loose, there is thus provided narrow pockets in which the slips may be inserted. Over the upper and lower ends of the back are placed two less flexible bands, upon which are printed the names of the days of the week, each band having two sets, following the other.

These bands slide around so that the upper band to bring the proper day of the week to the first day of the month. By having two sets of notes of engagements for each two months can be made. To avoid complication the phrases "Present month" and "Present month" are printed over the upper and lower bands. To identify the present month a card holding twelve cards, one for each month, is placed over the lower band.

Sugar from Corn.

Prof. F. Stewart of Murray has recently been granted a patent for an invention for the manufacture of maize sugar and for the production of maize for cellulose products. Professor Stewart has demonstrated the possibility of producing a fine quality of sugar from the juice of the corn stalk and in quantities which will make its culture very profitable. The cellulose products can be made equally profitable. Paper pulp is made, after the juices producing juices have been extracted, of a quality pronounced by experts to be of the best.

Old Frenchman in Mischief

An old man was recently arrested at Paris for stealing a pair of sabots or wooden shoes. At the police station he declared that he was seventy years old, and had never been in trouble before. His statements were found to be true. The old man was born on the 24th of June, 1805, and had performed his military service under Charles X in a regiment of the guard. He was released, and was at the same time presented with a small sum of money which had been collected for him.

What Wars Cost.

The strongest argument for the expenditure of whatever money is required to maintain our regular army an efficient and disciplined body of men can be found upon the immense cost of our wars when we have managed them in the past. The pension system, as it has been developed in the last twenty years, makes reliance on volunteer armies a colossal extravagance. A fortnight ago Congressman Gardner, of Michigan, discussed some interesting figures about the cost of the civil war. The direct cost was about $6,000,000,000. Pensions $3,222,000,000 has been paid, and it is estimated that the total expenditure will eventually reach nearly double that sum. That would mean an expenditure of $12,000,000,000 as the cost of keeping together a country of which the total property valuation in 1860 was $16,000,000,000. In the Spanish war (we again quote Mr. Gardner) there were 110,000 enlistments and 9,378 deaths from all causes. Of our Spanish war veterans 69,687 have already applied for pensions. If the civil war veterans had been equally willing eight years after 1865 to be assisted by the government there would have been 500,000 applications for pensions. As it was, there were 102,000. Our war department expenditures have increased in the last twenty years from $38,000,000 to $102,000,000; nevertheless, feeling no doubt about pensions, it is excellent policy for us to provide that, as far as possible, our fighting shall be done by professional soldiers, maintained in a state of high efficiency and commanded by highly trained officers. It would not take nearly so many of them as volunteers to do a given piece of work if they do it quicker and better, with much less peril to health and risk to stability. It costs too much to depend on veterans out of volunteers, and costs too much to make officers fit to be entrusted with the care of men and such stuff, of whatever natural novel apparatus for the prevention of seasickness has been tried. It consists of a comfortable armchair, the floor of which is vibrated both perpendicularly and transversely by a small motor placed under the chair, which is connected with the ship's electric plant. The motion is thus given to the chair, and is found to counteract the movement of the ship.

blizzard which confined members of the Antarctic sledge expedition to their tent for five days was a terrible experience, but a polar storm on Mars has lasted forty-one days, and another continued two weeks. Observations showed that long storms, with short intervals, are characteristic of the weather on our neighboring planet.

Among curious things that arrest the eye on arriving in Moscow is the presence of whips among drivers of carriages and all sorts of vehicles. There is a law prohibiting their use, the excellent condition of the horses attests the benefit of this humane law.

The ray of light, it is said, could move seven times around the globe between the ticks of a watch.

BREAD DYSPEPSIA.

Starch-Digesting Element Left Out.

Bread dyspepsia is common. It affects the bowels because white bread is nearly all starch, and starch is digested in the intestines, not in the stomach proper.

Hidden under the shell of the wheat kernel Nature has provided a curious element which is turned into diastase when it is subjected to the saliva and the pancreatic juices in the human intestines.

Without diastase is absolutely necessary digest starch and turn it into grape-sugar, which is the next form; but that part of the wheat berry makes dark bread, and the modern miller cannot afford to sell dark flour, so nature's valuable digester is thrown out and the human system must handle the starch as best it can, without the help that was intended.

No wonder that appendicitis, peritonitis, constipation, and all sorts of ills exist when we go so contrary to nature's law. The food experts that have created Grape-Nuts Food, knowing the above facts, made use in their experiments of the entire wheat and barley, including all the parts, and subjected them to moisture and long continued heat, which allows time and the proper conditions for developing the diastase, outside of the human body.

In this way the starchy part is transformed into grape-sugar in a perfectly natural manner, without the use of chemicals or any outside ingredients. The little sparkling crystals of grape-sugar can be seen on the pieces of Grape-Nuts. This food therefore is partially pre-digested and its use in place of bread will quickly correct the difficulties that have been brought about by the too free use of starch in the food, and that is very common in the human race to-day.

The effect of eating Grape-Nuts ten days or two weeks and the discontinuance of ordinary white bread, is very marked. The user will gain rapidly in health and physical and mental power.

"I was afflicted with dyspepsia for several years and at last was confined to my bed, unable to sit up.

"We tried several different doctors without relief.

"It is to Peruna I owe my life today.

"I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers."

Revised Formula.

"For a number of years requests have come to me from a multitude of grateful friends, urging that Peruna be given a slight laxative quality. I have been experimenting with a laxative addition for quite a length of time, and now feel gratified to announce to the friends of Peruna that I have incorporated such a quality in the medicine which, in my opinion, can only enhance its well-known beneficial character. A Jap Railway Ride.

When a native lady enters a Japanese railway carriage she slips her feet from her tiny shoes, stands upon the seat and then sits demurely with her feet doubled beneath her.

A moment later she lights a cigarette or her little pipe, which holds just tobacco enough to produce two good whiffs of smoke. All Japanese people sit with their feet upon the seat of the car and not as Europeans do.

When the ticket collector—attired in a blue uniform—enters the carriage he removes his cap and twice bows politely. He repeats the bow as he comes to each passenger to collect the tickets.

Birthdays were celebrated as long ago as the time of Pharaoh.

A Dangerous Accident

happened the other day to a prominent citizen's wife, whose horse ran away with her and flung her against a telegraph pole.

Such accidents, though of daily occurrence in all parts of the world, add but little to the sum-total of woman's suffering, as compared with the terrible results of the diseases peculiar to women, which drive so many women to premature graves.

The question is, what is to be done, if the coming race is to be protected, and the answer may well be told in the words of Mrs. Blanche E. Stephanou, of 1228 S. 42nd Ave., Chicago, Ill., wife of a prominent Greek lawyer of that city.

In a recent letter, she says: "For five years after the birth of my baby, I suffered constantly with backache, and could not wear a corset. I also had sideache and bearing down pains, which nothing would relieve. My husband spent hundreds of dollars on the best doctors here, but to no avail. The last one suggested an operation, but to this I would not consent. At last, on the advice of a dear friend, I took Wine of Cardui, and can truthfully say that from the very first bottle I began to improve. I now look and feel like a different woman, eat well, and suffer no more pain."

Cardui is a pure, harmless, vegetable medicine, for all the diseases peculiar to women. It relieves pain and regulates the functions. Sold at all druggists in $1.00 bottles. N 13.

The overhead trolley wire is used almost entirely on the street car lines in Germany, and the exclusive use of the storage battery system is only found on a three mile line at Bremerhaven. There is a combined overhead and underground conduit system in some of the large cities, for instance at Dresden, Berlin and Dusseldorf.

The Chinese Drum.

Kou is the Chinese word for drum, of which many kinds are used in China, Japan and Burma. Eastern drums differ from those of Europe in having their heads nailed on, not kept movable as our are for tuning purposes. The body is usually made of sandal wood, cedar or mulberry wood, or else of baken clay. They are used for many purposes—on state occasions, to tell the hour during the night, to scare away evil spirits as well as to invite visits from good spirits and to play the "Amens" at the end of verses in the Confucian services. Tiny drums are also carried by peddlers when hawking their wares. Etiquette insists that on any occasion when the emperor is present all drums must be muffled by being rolled in folds of cloth.

There are more aquatic birds than there are land birds.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Jumble of Languages.

There are towns in Hungary, and small towns, too, where from seven to ten idioms are constantly being used. On the Galician frontier there in a lovely valley the old town of Eperjes. The number of its inhabitants does not exceed 12,000. To this day the good people of Eperjes are in the habit of talking or being talked to in six different dialects. An ordinary household will include a Slovak man servant, a Hungarian coachman, a German cook and a Polish chambermaid. What is still more remarkable, each grade of society will tenaciously cling to its own language for centuries.

Ireland's Potatoes.

The acreage under potatoes in Ireland in 1906 was 616,755. The Champion potato was first introduced in quantity in Ireland in the year 1880, after the famine of the potato crop of 1879. Since that year it has constituted the main potato crop of the country.

ECZEMA AFFLICTS FAMILY.

Father and Five Children Suffered For Two Years With Terrible Eczema—Wonderful Cure by Cuticura.

"My husband and five children were all afflicted with eczema. They had it two years. We used all the home remedies we could hear of, without any relief, and then went to a physician and got medicine two different times, and it got worse. It affected us all over except head and hands. We saw Cuticura Remedies advertised and concluded to try them. So I sent for $1.00 worth, consisting of one cake of Cuticura Soap, one box of Ointment and one vial of Pills, and we commenced to use them. I do not know how to express my joy in finding a cure, for two of my children were so bad that they have the brown scars on their bodies where they were sore. Mrs. Maggie B. Hill, Stevens, Mason Co., W. Va., June 12, 1905."

Zululand rubber is the product of a sort of vine known to the natives as Ibungu and which has been identified by botanists as Landolphia Kirkii. This tree is the most important source of rubber in East Africa. The rubber is of good quality, though worth less than fine Para rubber.

Benefits of Birds.

If the world were birdless, a naturalist declares, man could not inhabit it after nine years' time, in spite of all the sprays and poisons that could be manufactured for the destruction of insects. The insects and bugs would simply eat all the orchards and crops in that time.

Strength of Steel Cars.

Before the gaze of a score of startled spectators the other day a huge steel coal car, within sight of the capitol at Washington, backed off a twenty-foot trestle and described a half-somersault, depositing a load of many tons of bituminous coal on the sidewalk, says Technical World Magazine for May.

The involuntary plunge is said to have been due to slippery rails and miscalculation of distance. Strange to say, although the mass of iron and coal weighed fully 150,000 pounds, no injury was done to the car, except the comparatively small inconvenience incident to removing the coal from the sidewalk to the bins, a short distance away, for which it was destined.

Within an hour after the accident a wrecking crew was on the spot, and had effaced practically all indications of the recent plunge of the big car into space. The ordinary methods of hoisting were employed, and two steel cables were attached, the huge burden being gradually pulled back to the rails. The car was immediately coupled to its train and disappeared behind a wreath of smoke on its return trip to the mines at Cumberland, Md.

CORDIAL INVITATION

ADDRESSED TO WORKING GIRLS

Miss Barrows Tells How Mrs. Pinkham's Advice Helps Working Girls.

Girls who work are particularly susceptible to female disorders, especially those who are obliged to stand on their feet from morning until night in stores or factories.

Day in and day out the girl toils, and she is often the bread-winner of the family. Whether she is sick or well, whether it rains or shines, she must get to her place of employment, perform the duties exacted of her—smile and be agreeable.

Among this class the symptoms of female diseases are early manifest by weak and aching backs, pain in the lower limbs and lower part of the stomach. In consequence of frequent wetting of the feet, periods become painful and irregular, and frequently there are faint and dizzy spells, with loss of appetite, until life is a burden. All these symptoms point to a derangement of the female organism which can be easily and promptly cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Miss Abby F. Barrows, Nelsonville, Athens Co., Ohio, tells what this great medicine did for her. She writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I feel it my duty to tell you the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier have done for me. Before I took them I was very nervous, had dull headaches, pains in back, and periods were irregular, I had been to several doctors, and they did me no good.

"Your medicine has made me well and strong. I can do most any kind of work without complaint, and my periods are all right.

"I am in better health than I ever was, and I know it is all due to your remedies. I recommend your advice and medicine to all who suffer."

It is to such girls that Mrs. Pinkham holds out a helping hand and extends a cordial invitation to correspond with her. She is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge. Her long record of success in treating woman's ills makes her letters of advice of untold value to every ailing working girl. Address, Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, theFather of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

ALABAMA BRIEFS.

Fairbanks in Birmingham.

Birmingham.—Vice President Chas. W. Fairbanks, his wife and Mrs. C. H. Ackert, wife of Fourth Vice President C. H. Ackert, of the Southern railway, received a hearty welcome in Birmingham Friday from shortly after their arrival in a private car over the Southern until a late hour.

At 7 o'clock a number of prominent citizens representing the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, the Birmingham Commercial club and the Scottish Rite Masons, met the vice president and his ladies at the station, and in carriages and automobiles they were escorted to the home of Col. and Mrs. T. G. Bush, on Highland avenue, South Highlands, where breakfast was partaken of.

At 11 o'clock Mr. Fairbanks and the ladies repaired to general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, in which the distinguished visitor is a fraternal delegate. The vice president was introduced to the conference by Bishop Ross and the introduction was acknowledged in a few words.

When the vice president had concluded the delegates in the conference arose and began singing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." Mr. Fairbanks remained at the conference until after 1 o'clock. The ladies in the party returned to the residence of Mrs. Bush, where luncheon was served. Later in the afternoon Mrs. Bush received in honor of Mrs. Fairbanks and Mrs. Ackert, the affair being one of the most splendid social functions of the season.

At 1:30 o'clock the vice president was driven in an automobile to the Country club, where a luncheon was served. A little reception was held before the luncheon. W. P. C. Harding, president of the First National bank, acted as toastmaster for the luncheon. The tables were set in the shape of an X, and flowers were used in profusion. The distinguished visitor was given a prominent position in the center, while on all sides were prominent members of the general conference who had been invited. Mayor George B. Ward extended a welcome in a few words. Mr. Robert Jemison, Jr., the recently elected president of the Commercial club, the youngest man of wealth in Birmingham, was next introduced and he extended a welcome in behalf of the commercial organizations of the city, paying a high tribute to Mr. Fairbanks as a high-class, Christian gentleman.

Hanson Buys Out Compress Company.

Montgomery, Ala.—Papers were filed with the judge of probate court recording the sale of the entire land holdings of the Alabama Compress and Storage Company, the corporation which now controls nearly all the large plants in that line of business in Alabama, and which is managed by C. C. Hanson, of Atlanta.

By the sale the Alabama Compress company goes out of existence, its trade and property being absorbed by the larger organizations.

Coal Company Incorporated.

Birmingham.—The Sepoy Coal company, with a capital stock of $25,000, has filed articles of incorporation in the probate court. A general coal mining business is to be carried on, headquarters being in Birmingham. H. W. Perry, G. M. Brown and Sam Perry, Jr., are the incorporators.

Biddle in Birmingham.

Birmingham.—W. B. Biddle, third vice president of the Rock Island and Frisco railroads, headquarters in Chicago, spent Saturday in Birmingham inspecting the terminals owned by the Frisco at this point. He was tendered a luncheon at the Country club, after which he left for Kansas City.

It is stated that the visit to the district is significant anad that early developments may be looked for. The Frisco is largely interested in terminal property in Birmingham, and it is understood that further development is proposed.

District Primary Called.

Cullman.—The county democratic executive committee, at its meeting last March, called a primary for state senator from this, the Third Senatorial district. This action was resented by the other counties in the district, Blount and Winston, and Judge John L. Kelton, of Blount county, presided over a meeting of the democratic committee of the district, which repudiated the action of the committee of Cullman county and called a primary from the district at large to be held at the time of holding the general state primary. In the county primary A. A. Griffith defeated F. E. St. John by about 400.

Gadsden, Ala.—Louis, the 10-year-old son of Sam Bloch, a prominent merchant, died from the effect of a fall from a telephone pole last night. His skull was badly crushed and he lingered through the night. Opinions differ as to the cause. Some say he touched a live electric wire which was near, and others claim he lost his balance. He was an only child and much sympathy is felt for his parents.

Scaffolding Falls.

The men were at work on the scaffold repairing the theatre building when the scaffold, erected at a height of twenty-five feet, collapsed without warning. Ruple and Underwood were caught by the falling timber and crushed by its weight. Stewart and Spencer jumped, clearing the debris, and were not injured.

Episcopal Meet Closes.

Selma, Ala.—The seventy-fifth annual meeting of the diocesan council of the Alabama Proetstant Episcopal church came to a close Friday afternoon. Huntsville was selected as the next place of meeting. The board of missions chosen consists of B. H. Marshall, E. C. Andrew, C. C. Grayson, Luke F. Matthews and J. H. Fowlkes. The report on the state of the church showed a total number of 8,414 communicants, an increase of 9 per cent. during the year. The chancellor of the council was instructed to endeavor to secure the passage by the legislature of a law allowing an increase from $50,000 to $100,000 in the bishop's fund. A committee of twelve was named to take up the matter of disposing of the church property in Mobile. The home mission fund was apportioned as follows:

Birmingham, $2,025; Huntsville, $700; Montgomery, $1,500; Selma, $1,200; Mobile, $1,535.

Sensational Robbbery.

Birmingham.—One of the most sensational robberies that has occurred in the Birmingham district in many a day was that in which Thomas L. King, a merchant of Palos, was compelled to hand over $636 in cash to two white masked desperadoes.

The bold hold-up occurred about half way between Flat Top and Palos. Mr. King had been to the former place, and having collected a large sum of money, was returning to Palos. Unexpectedly the two men confronted him and two revolvers were pointed threateningly at his head. Instantly his hands went into the air and a few seconds later the highwaymen had extracted $636 in cash from his pockets. Three hundred dollars of the money was in $20 bills and the remainer was in smaller bills, ranging from $1 to $10.

Land Office Transfer.

Montgomery.—Gen. R. D. Johnston, of Birmingham, who was appointed some time ago register of the United States land office in Montgomery, failed to appear to be sworn into office in this city Saturday.

Owing to a tecnical difficulty in the filing of General Johnston's bond for the office the return of the commission from the land department in Washington has been delayed, and was not received in time for the appointee to come to the Capital City. It is expected that he will report to take charge Monday.

Maj. Robert Barber, the outgoing official, continues in office until his successor is sworn in. Major Barber was reported last evening as being seriously ill at his residence.

Quake in Marengo County.

Selma.—The train crew of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, running between Myrtlewood, in Marengo county, and this city, reported that a perceptible earthquake shock was felt in Myrtlewood. The shock is said to have lasted for what seemed a half minute and the houses rocked to such an extent that many ran out into their yards in their night clothes Myrtlewood is located upon a hillside and it is argued that if an earthquake shock really struck that section it would be felt at such a point more than any other. So far as known no reports have been received of the shock having been felt anywhere else in the neighborhood.

Cotton Crop Injured.

Hamilton, Ala.—The reports from almost everywhere seem to verify the rumor that the cotton crop is injured to a certain extent almost everywhere on account of the cold weather and frosts.

Oscar Orgain Dies.

Huntsville.—Oscar Orgain, a popular young man of the city, died at the home of his father, W. B. Orgain. He was ill less than a week with peritonitis. The young man was 19 years old.

Dothan, Ala.—Solicitor Parks in an impassioned appeal for law and justice made the closing speech in the case of the state against E. L. Cowan, concluding just at nightfall Friday night, and Judge Perce ordered an adjournment until Saturday morning, at which time he charged the jury, and another one of the most important cases in the criminal history of Southeast Alabama entered upon its last stage in the courts.

THE UNION.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL; SPECIAL FAVORS TO NONE.

VOL IV. CLANTON, ALA., MAY 31 1906. NO. 10

MARS HILL.

Dear Union

There is some sickness in our community, but we are grateful that there is not more. Mrs. Lillie Scott, wife of W. Scott, has been sick, but we are glad to say she's on the mend now. Crops look pretty well up. Some are done chopping cotton and some have worked corn the second time and are cutting peas. J. N. Scott is cutting wheat and was too busy to come to the union meeting Saturday. We hope Mr. Scott will not be in this rush next time we meet. A. J. Scott visited his son, Mrs Guthrie, last week. C. L. Langston was a visitor at C. W. Scott's Saturday. Our boys are busy putting up telephone wire (from Mars Hill to Cofer's). It will be ready for service as soon as the boxes arrive. We've a new organ at our church. It makes our singers feel glad to have such a fine accompaniment, and it makes us old people feel young when we sit back and listen to the harmony. Oh! how it cheers us up when we think back over the past years and compare the times, then and now, and note the improvements and advantages which our children are enjoying. We intend having a Children's Day in the near future. Of course you Union readers will know of it, and we want a nice crowd. When I say a nice crowd, I don't mean the fellow with the bottle or his pistol, but those who are actually interested in the service. And we want to especially invite our worthy editor and Probate Judge to be with us. Oh I like to have forgot our union meeting Saturday evening, but it made me feel glad when it. Our president was there and as usual praising the union cause. All present every one had something to say about the meeting. That's the way, boys; let's come next time with something that will interest us. We'd like to see some of our lady members come out every time. Our singing on Sunday was a grand success. Among the visitors we noticed S. L. Scott and family, from Bibb county; R. A. Day and family, from Oakley; James Franklin and other young men with their best girls. Farrell Ward, with his charming young wife, was there from Pleasant Grove. Several leaders were on the floor, viz: W. Gothard, G. W. Scott, James Franklin and Tonie Cofer. Miss Levy Cofer presided at the organ. Wishing The Union, editor and readers great success, I'm still

THE OLD MAN.

SOUTH BESSIE.

Here we are again, with nothing to interest your readers, but that is needless, for they will soon learn without being told. The Pleasant Grove correspondent gave us a good article last week. Give us the news and the editor your thanks, then the paper will continue to live and fight the people's battles. The time is near when the "dear people" are going to be continually called on, but now is the time for the people to think for the people, talk for the people, work for the people, and last, but not least, read for the people. Read and support the people's paper. The Union, the paper for the great common people of Chilton. Never forget a friend, and, as Editor Baltzell, of the Alliance Herald, once said, "Don't do what your enemy wants you to do." Never give your enemy a dollar to see you or just to hear what he has to say. Do you see the point? Well, our correspondent had the happy privilege of hearing Mr. Parker speak at Thorsby on the 17th inst. His address was lucid, grand and true, and was listened to closely by a large audience. The people are awake. They will never sleep again. The truth is being clearly and long cherished errors must yield to the increasing light as alluded to by Wm. G. Shell when he said: "The mists are all rolled away . . . all hail the supernal light. The sun shall go down no more." We had a good prayer service last Sunday evening, a little crowd, good singing by S. N. Waldrup, stirring testimonials by others. We thank the people for their kind expressions, both public and private, relative to our humble contributions to The Union. So we are now and expect to remain

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

COURT NOTES.

On Saturday several prisoners were let off to work out their sentences. Will Fulmer (white) was one of the men. Judge Brewer gave him three days at hard labor for the county, in addition to a $50 fine which the petit jury put on him. Molett Webb and Henry [illegible] (colored) will spend a month's time for the county. Jeff Sh[illegible] goes to the penitentiary for three years. The grand jury was in session nine days, the first part of which was apparently frittered away on a number of cases that ought never to have come before them. It's the longest session on record in our county but Chilton has increased so in population, etc., that the old habit of adjourning on Monday and adjourning on Thursday cannot be followed any more. Every citizen of our county should read the report of the grand jury carefully, and then show by his actions whether he will help enforce the laws or not. Assessor Pounds got a well merited commendation from the body, which seems to have devoted some time to investigating the county officials, and under which scrutiny our elected officers appear to have come out all right.

HAPPY HOLLOW.

We'e as good a Sunday school at Cedar Grove now as any community could have, for which blessing we thank God, and hope to see our people always stand in the front rank. Two of our boys paid Pleasant Grove a visit last Sunday with the "best of company." W. J. Mims has returned home from attending college at Hamilton, Ala., but expects to go back soon, accompanied by M. W. Mims. Josh Oldacre after having engaged a double rig was compelled to withdraw the motion by a change of minds, but "if at first you don't succeed, try, try again." "The race is not always to the swife, nor the battle to the strong." M. W. Mims paid Poplar Springs a visit last Sunday and was well entertained by the charming young ladies of that vicinity. Our boys are taking a good deal of stock in baseball affairs just at present, and Cedar Grove expects to play the "Chapel" next Saturday at 2:30 p. m. on Cedar Grove grounds. Success to The Union. SHORTY'S PET.

LEANDER'S CLANTON LETTER.

Mr. Editor:

Please open up the pages of your dear paper to me again, and I'll try to entertain your readers a bit. I saw in last week's Union where a correspondent said my letter was "full of common sense." That brings to mind the old saying that "sense is the only thing in this world of which the common sort is the best." Now, don't say that I'm wanting an office and trying to make folks think I'm full of common sense, but I'm so glad there is one man (whoever he is) that has found out that I've got any sense at all, until I can't help but mention it. Well, I must get down to "biz." I have been told that F. A. Gulledge has a kind of hankering to represent "the dear people" of Chilton in the Legislature; also that Mr. Adams would like to have another hunk of pie, and that Mr. Morgan would like to serve as Sheriff again. Well, if either of them "gets there" it will mightily surprise "ye scribe," as the time when our ranks could be divided and so give the Democrats a chance to come in between has passed into oblivion, never to come forth again. I've been told that if you kill hogs on a certain time of the moon that the meat will all go to grease. Well, after the November election there won't be even a greasy spot left of the Democratic ring in our county; though it does look like they ought to fare as well as hogs, but they won't. I do think that any man that runs on the Democratic ticket in this county will be badly beaten in the general election, for though and these candidates will say with Bailey, of Texas, that somebody is a "malicious and deliberate liar" when they compare the vote they get with the promises they got. Boys, "stand pat," and we're sure to win. I believe if more of our men would take The Union that they would be better Republicans than they are. And say, brother, have you paid up your back dues to The Union and subscribed a year in advance? If not do so at once, as our paper needs our solid support. The man that uses the mole on the back of his neck for a collar button, rides a freight car to save 3 cents a mile, lights the lamp with a straw to save a match and stops his clock at night to save wear is a free-hearted, generous gentleman, compared with the man who takes a paper and when asked to pay up puts it back in the postoffice marked "refused." So be good, boys, and come on and subscribe, or pay up, as the case may be, and thereby "show your faith by your work." The best paper in Chilton county is The Union. Yours as ever, LEANDER.

WEST BESSIE.

Editor Union:

Mr. James Crumpton is on the sick list. J. N. Posey and family spent Sunday at L. D. Posey's. Our school will open at the Freeman school house the first Monday in June. I think our school was well represented at Pleasant Hill Church. Well, "Just a Voter," your big gun was all right. I wish still more people would write to The Union. It is the best paper I ever saw. Well, as this is my first attempt I'll ring off. With best wishes to all.

ONE AMONG THEM.

PLETCHER.

Mr. Editor:

Here I am, as I hear some making inquiries about "What has become of the Pletcher writer?" Health here is good at present, and knocking cotton to one stalk in the hill is all the go. Your humble scribe would have come sooner, but he's been very busy; had to go to court one day last week, and when he got back he had to go to mill for Polly (the barber's wife). So by that time the fowls (grass and weeds) were in the garden and the fields, and among it all it has kept the barber busy cutting and shaving. The time of all was when I was taking some honey from the bee-gums and the bees would sit down on me, and it surely felt as if they had some fire about them. Well, the letter about Salem singing last week was good. Look out, you fellows who sell and drink "booze." The good people are going to get right in behind you, and they'll make you "walk turkey." I'm looking for that double-barrel from "Just a Voter." I think it liked to have come in last week's Union as a prayer from the dummies. Well, as the lightning bugs are firing up and the whippoorwills are making their voices heard in the swamp I'll close with best wishes to The Union and its many readers. BARBER.

MAPLESVILLE.

Mr. Hollister, of the T. T. Lumber Company, spent Sunday in our town. E. G. Ensign has returned from a lengthy visit to the East. One of the Italians shot his brother accidentally last Sunday. The wound was slight. The man was arrested and taken before 'Squire Garner, but the evidence showed it was an accident. Miss Florence Adair gave a concert, in which all the school children took part. The program was long, but it was a grand success, all the children having their parts perfect. Miss Myrtle Lawrence, of Birmingham, played the piano with great credit to herself. We regret to part with Mis Adair. She has taught for us for three years, but she has secured a position at Gallion, with more pay and less work. Cal. Foshee and Dr. Dunlap are sure that the next teacher won't be as nice as Miss Florence. A head-on collision on the M. & O. today caused some excitement. No one was hurt, but two engines and several cars were smashed. Miss Sallie Walker is convalescing from the fever, and the trained nurse left Saturday. Mrs. F. L. Dawson is able to again walk around the house. Mrs. S. P. Gilbert is on a visit to her mother in Mobile. Arthur Dedrick and Miss Sue Snow took an automobile ride to Plantersville Sunday afternoon. This cool weather is bad on the cotton in this section. Miss Isabie Saportas is visiting friends in Uniontown. Miss Lottie Plant is visiting relatives in Birmingham. Calhoun Merchant is building a nice dwelling. John Gandy is the contractor. Success to The Union and its friends. "O."

WYLAM.

Oh, my! What a beautiful day this is. We had a nice rain last night, and everything looks fresh again. Rev. H. C. Brabham filled his regular appointment at the Baptist Church Sunday and preached an excellent sermon to an attentive congregation. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Sorrell spent Saturday night with Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Maddox, and report says that they made some fine ice cream; and then Mrs. H. C. Maddox had to go to Mrs. J. L. Cauley's Sunday to help them eat ice cream lucky for her. Mrs. E. Melton has been sick, but is better now. Dr. Miller, of Tipton, Ga., is here to help in the Baptist protracted meeting now on. I hope the farmers of Chilton have had plenty of rain and will make good crops, and have some fine watermelons, etc. Best wishes to The Union and its dear readers.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—Red Daniel, under sentence of death, to be hanged June 1, cut his way through the rock wall of the jail and got away. A carriage was seen in the vicinity of the jail, and it is supposed it was waiting for Daniel. The escape was made possible by an oversight of the jailer, who left the prisoner outside the steel cage in which he was always locked over night.

Daniel was convicted of the shooting of Ed Beardsley over a crap game and the death sentence had been suspended pending a motion for a new trial.

A telegram has been sent the governor asking that he offer a reward.

After the matter was thoroughly explained and discussed an organization was effected, called the Greenville School Improvement association. The rural districts will be the field of labor, and the unequipped and comfortless school buildings will be given special attention.

S. J. Bowie Out of Race.

Anniston.—Congressman S. J. Bowie has declined to run again for congress from the Fourth district.

In an interview Mr. Bowie stated that he had been offered and had accepted a partnership to practice law with E. H. Cabaniss, of Birmingham. Mr. Bowie said he expected, however, while not a candidate for re-election, to fill out the balance of his unexpired term.

Capital Stock Increased.

Trenton, N. J.—The Great Western Sugar company filed a certificate with the secretary of state here increasing its capital stock from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000, of which half is preferred and half common. The increase was decided upon at a meeting held January 20. H. O. Havemeyer is president of the company and C. R. Heike is secretary.

Bribery Charged.

St. Louis, Mo.—Assistant Circuit Attorney Fickeissen stated that he had just drawn up a new indictment charging Robert M. Snyder, capitalist, of Kansas City, with bribery on the allegatio nof having paid $50,000 to certain members of the city council in 1898 for the passage of the central traction bill.

ALABAMA BRIEFS.

Alabama Bonds Sold to Florida.

Montgomery, Ala.—Governor Jelks has delivered to Hon. W. V. Knott, treasurer of the state of Florida, $60,000 of the July issue of Alabama bonds, bought by that state at the sale of seven millions of securities a few weeks ago.

Florida elected to take registered bonds, which will be delivered into the hands of Mr. Knott by the governor.

The small bidders on the new issue, which were as good or better than the syndicate bids, are being supplied by the governor. As fast as the blank securities can be signed up by the governor, the auditor and the treasurer, they are being set aside for the small bidders in order that they may be cared for before delivery of the large amount begins.

The blank bonds are coming in right along and will be here in time to deliver all the issue before the time of maturity of the older, whose place they are to take.

The regular monthly meeting of the state railroad commission will be held on June 5 and immediately thereafter the lines of the Atlantic Coast Line will be inspected.

Pardon Is Sought.

Montgomery, Ala.—Friends of Frank Krell, a well-known young man of Montevallo, who is serving a thirty-year term in the penitentiary for the killing of Walter Cary, being convicted in the spring of 1903, were before the pardon board Friday seeking to have him released from the confinement of the state's prison. This is the second attempt along this line in the past few months.

The papers in the interest of Krell fill a large envelope. There is also a good sized envelope filled with letters and papers protesting against his release. Both sides include good men of the county and community. W. B. Browne, of Columbiana was the attorney for the case.

Contract for Nine Miles of Sewer.

Gadsden.—The contract for the construction of nine miles of sewers in this city was awarded to the West Construction company, of Chattanooga, Tenn., their bid being $27,700.78, and the lowest submitted. The prices ranged from this figure up to $36,534.50. Contractors were present and submitted bids from Birmingham, Anniston, New Orleans and Chattanooga. Work will commence just as soon as the material and labor can be assembled.

Dr. Jenkins Appointed.

Montgomery, Ala.—Rev. J. A. Jenkins, pastor of the West End Baptist Church, has been selected for the responsible duties of field agent of the Alabama Sunday School association.

The selection was made by a subcommittee of the executive committee of the association appointed at the recent convention of the state association held in this city.

GREAT WASTE OF FUEL.

Geological Survey Reports Enormous Loss.

Some of the opinions of the Geological Survey regarding the waste of fuel in this country are interesting. In a recent report, after showing that the people of this country expend approximately $1,500,000,000 for fuel in the production of heat, light and power last year, the experts of the survey say:

The losses in the utilization of coal for the development of power, light and heat under existing conditions are so great that in a ton of coal consumed in an ordinary manufacturing plant less than five per cent. of the total energy is available for the actual purpose of manufacturing; that in an ordinary locomotive only from three to five per cent. of the fuel energy is obtained in pulling the train; that in our best practice ordinarily not more than one-seventh of one per cent. of the fuel energy is actually transformed into useful light; that gases from the blast furnaces of the country are now wasted into the atmosphere that would yield continuously, if properly utilized, more than 2,500,000 horse-power; and that by-products might be saved from the 40,000,000 tons of coal which would be converted into coke that would have an aggregate yearly value much greater than that of the coke itself. The by-products would include ammonia sufficient to fertilize our farms, creosote for the preservation of timber, and pitch enough for roofing our slack coals, roofing our barns and repairing some of our roads.

How appalling that such waste should continue after we know that it exists! Unfortunately, it is not always clear even to those who understand the nature and use of coal how such economies may be effected. No methods, for instance, are known by which more than one-half of the nitrogen in coal can be saved in the manufacture of coke. There is no subject touching the welfare of the human race on which research is more needed than economy in the use of fuel.

Small kindnesses, small courtesies, small considerations, habitually practiced in our social intercourse, would give greater charm to the character than the display of great talents and splendid accomplishments.—Kelty.

We are not sent into this world to do anything into which we cannot put our hearts. We have certain work to do for our bread, and that is to be done strenuously; other work we do for our delight, and that is to be done by halves or shifts, but with a thoroughness what is not worth this effort is not worth be done at all.—John Ruskin.

We have a great deal more kindness than is ever spoken. In spite of the selfishness that chills the world, as the east winds, the whole human race is bathed with an element of love like a fine ether. How many persons we meet in houses, whom we do not speak to, whom yet we honor, and they honor us! How many we see in the great street, or sit with in church, whom, though silently, we warmly joice to be with! The heart knows—Emerson.

Dangerous Suction of a Train.

The peril of standing too near railroad trains was shown at Larchmoneck, Westchester County, yesterday afternoon when Robert Ellis, a deputy county clerk, was caught in the suction of the Boston express train of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, dragged forty feet, and instantly killed. It is not an advisable thing for persons to test the power of standing near a train passing at high rate of speed. The train in this case was going at the rate of sixty miles an hour, and the displacement of air in such a case is terrific. The rush of it in the immediate vicinity of which even strong men sometimes do not resist. Many persons assume that so long as they do not step on the track they are in no danger. A person will give a little thought to the matter they will see their mistake. In addition there is always the possibility of something projecting from the train which will strike one standing close to the tracks. Stand back and guard against currents as well as the train in the right way.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Secret of Success.

The secret of success in the literary field is not fine writing, fine talking or palaver. The secret of success in a country field is—work! Work, and the gospel truth. Earnest work, Horace Greeley, is what counts for success.

THE PULPIT.

ELOQUENT SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. D. H. OVERTON.

Subject: Confessing Christ.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Sunday morning Rev. Daniel H. Overton, pastor of Green Avenue Presbyterian church, preached on "Confessing Christ." The text was from John xii. 42: "Nevertheless even of the rulers many believed on Him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess it, lest they should be put out of the synagogue, for they loved the glory of men more than the glory of God." Mr. Overton said:

We have mentioned here in the text one of the greatest privileges and duties of our lives, namely, that of believing in Christ, and that of confessing Christ. John, in telling the story of Christ's work, is complaining that there were so many who though they saw the wonderful works Christ did before them, did not believe on Him. He explains this by saying that this is but a repetition of the experiences of the prophets. Isaiah, one of the greatest prophets of the Old Testament, had the same complaint: "Who hath believed our report? And to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?" He complained of blinded eyes, and hearts and of stubborn hearts. If these things were true of the prophets of the past; if this was the experience of them all, then it is not strange that it should be Christ's experience. Isaiah saw that it must ever be the experience of the true prophet that would come to the earth, even of that greatest prophet whom he expected, the Messiah, the Christ, and so he predicted this experience for Him. The greater the glory and the more marvelous His work, the greater would be the opposition to Him. Such experience would argue against the Messiahship of Jesus Christ, but in favor of it.

That this was the experience of the Christ the verses preceding the text, and many others that we might give, declare. Often He complained of the unbelief of men's faith and the dullness of men's minds, and the stubbornness of men's will. We read that "He marveled at their unbelief." He had many things that He wanted to say to them, but their minds were so dull that they could not understand Him. He wept over the Holy City most of all, because of the stubbornness of the wills of its perishing people.

Yet even though this was Christ's experience, as it has been the experience of every prophet, His word and His work did not return unto Him empty. Some believed, and followed and confessed. Many others believed, as we read in the text, but did not confess their belief. They were timid, vacillating, half hearted Christians. It is of such that I would speak this Sunday morning. And leading up to this I would speak first of believing on Christ.

This, of course, is fundamental, and all important. "Without faith it is impossible to please Him." Without faith it is impossible for Christ to be anything to us, or to do anything for us. It is faith that links our lives to His—that brings Him near, and makes Him real to us. We must believe in Him before we cannot reap the benefit of His great and glorious work for us. Everywhere in Christ's message and in all the New Testament faith is made a condition of the blessed life. This is one of all life's relationships and it is supremely true of our relationship to God. There is little that He can do for us unless by faith we open our hearts and lives to Him. Faith is the channel that lets the life of God into the soul of man.

But this is what I wish to emphasize: Our faith must be strong enough to lead to something. It must lead to confession, to service, to sacrifice. "Faith without work is dead." The faith that sets us to no task, and that leads to no changed and better life is a false and useless faith. I say that because I believe that so much of the faith in Christ is of this kind. It is a vague, visionary, general, half hearted, spasmodic faith that leads to nothing permanent, and takes us nowhere worth while. It is a faith that was well represented in that crowd that followed Christ, or that threw garments, or palms in His way on that first Palm Sunday long ago.

It is believed by many that there were many in the multitude who did Him honor that day, but who before the week ended were crying with another crowd: "Away with Him! Crucify Him!" Their faith was futile because it led to no confession, nor consecration.

There is much faith in Christ that is like that to-day. It is spasmodic, hysterical, ephemeral. It leads people to church at Easter time, or at Christmas, or rarely if ever are seen there at any other time of the whole year. It may lead that such have come to church once to show their new found faith in Christ, but we will not bring that accusation against them. We will give them credit for a little faith, even if it does not last except but for one or two days of the year.

Then there is a great deal of this kind of faith out in the world that never gets into the churches even for once or twice a year. It is a negative, passive faith. It has nothing against Christ, but it leads to nothing for Him. There are lots of people who will tell you, if you asked them, that they believe in Christ, and yet they are doing nothing for His cause or kingdom. They never have confessed Him publicly. They never have enlisted in His service.

Now faith of this kind is good as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough. It is better than unbelief and opposition, I suppose, but it is sometimes harder to deal with, and to get anything out of, than are these. I have thought. Our faith, if it is real, and if it amounts to anything, must lead us to confession, and to consecration, to service and to sacrifice.

It is of the great duty and privilege of confessing Christ that I would speak especially this morning. We see in the text that there were many in Christ's time who believed on Him, but who did not confess their belief, nor show their allegiance. There are very many such to-day, I believe, and it is to those and for those that I would speak. Why is it that there are so many timid Christians, and hesitating half-hearted Christians in the world? Why is it that there are so many men of good morals, and of good will, and possibly of Christian characters, who are unattached to any of our churches, and who, although they believe in Christ, have never confessed Him in that way, at least.

Again we find the answer in the text. "Nevertheless even of the rulers many believed on Him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess it, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the glory of men more than the glory of God."

The first reason is, false fears. These timid believers did not confess Christ for fear of being put out of the synagogue. The Pharisees had issued a decree that if any member of their synagogues should so much as confess that he knew Jesus he would be excommunicated from the synagogue. They were afraid of this threat or decree, and so they did not confess Christ. They did not have faith enough to make them bold and fearless or to lead them to do their duty whatever might be the consequences. They took counsel of their fears, and so they failed in their duty. It meant much to them to lose their place in the synagogue. They knew that. It really meant more to them to confess Christ even if they did lost their place in the synagogue. They did not know that. They did not know that as we know it to-day. We blame them, but in blaming them we condemn ourselves, and the people of this day who do not confess Christ.

There are very many to-day who believe in Christ with more or less faith who do not make any public confession or profession of their faith. What hinders them? Many things, no doubt, but among those many things this—a false fear, the fear of giving up or losing some coveted position or pleasure. Let me illustrate what I mean. There was a family at one time attending this church quite regularly. I asked them several times if they would not like to make a public profession of their faith and join our church. They always objected, and gave me some weak excuse, but finally they gave me the real reason. They said: "You know, we like to play cards some times, and we go to the theatre once in a while, and we don't think that a church member ought to do these things, so we don't join the church." Thus, for the fear of losing these things, they never made a public confession of their faith by uniting with the church. They were wrong, and I told them so. They were wrong in the first place, in concluding that a church member might never play cards, or go to the theatre without injury to his soul, or to the church; and then they were utterly wrong in the second place, in that they concluded that these things were wrong for the believer in the church, and especially, in the third place, in believing that these things, even if they were wrong and had to be given up, were of more importance than joining the church, and so chose these rather than the fulfilling of their faith by a public confession.

I believe there are many like them who put some little thing, or false fear, in the way of doing their full duty toward their God. And thus they stultify their souls and prove false to their faith. There are many who say to me: "I would like to be a Christian and join the church, but there are so many things that I would have to give up that now I like to do." They are wrong. In becoming a Christian we need to give up only what is wrong, and every true person ought to be willing to do that, anyway. And then the things that we lose are as nothing compared to the things that we gain. When we can say, with Paul, "For me to live is Christ," then we will count all other coveted things as refuse in order that we may have more of Christ. Aye, even death will be a gain to us, for it will give us more of Christ. "Godliness is profitable, both for the life that now is, and for the life that is to come."

Away, then, with all false fears and silly excuses, and let all who believe in Christ confess Christ. This is His own desire for us, as we know. "For whosoever shall confess Me before men, him will I confess before My Father in heaven."

But not only do false fears keep people from the duty and the privilege of confessing their faith in Christ; there is another reason given in the text. It is false loves. "For they loved the glory of men more than the glory of God." They wished to be thought well of by these Pharisees of the synagogue and to receive their praise. Their praise was something real and present and tangible. The praise of God for duty well done; that was far off and uncertain. They believed in this lowly Nazarene. They thought He was the Messiah, and, if He was the Messiah, it would certainly be to the glory of God if they would confess their faith in Him. It would help on God's kingdom in the world. But if they should declare their faith in Christ, the Pharisees would be displeased and no longer praise and glorify them. And so they choose the glory and praise of the Pharisees, rather than the glory and praise of God.

There are very many to-day who make that mistake. They love the praise of men, of their comrades, more than the praise of God, and so they fail in doing their full duty to God. They are afraid of what some of their friends will say if they come out and make a bold confession of their faith in Christ. I believe this love of the praise of men, and coupled with it the fear of what others will say, is keeping many from their well-known duty toward God. Oh, let neither false fears nor false loves keep any one back from duty, his full duty, toward God and His church.

The Sure Foundation.

Some are all their days laying the foundation, and are never able to build upon it to any comfort to themselves or usefulness to others; and the reason is, because they will be mixing with the foundation, stones that are only for the following building. They will be bringing their obedience, duties, mortification of sin, and the like unto the foundation. These are precious stones to build with, but unmeet to be first laid, to bear upon them the whole weight of the building. The foundation is to be laid in grace, mercy, pardon in the blood of Christ. But if the foundation be of grace, it is not at all of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. If anything of our own be mixed with grace in this matter, it utterly destroyed the nature of grace, which, if it be not alone, is not at all.—Owen.

NON-EXPLOSIVE OIL CAN.

Automobilists and insurance men will be interested in the non-explosive oil can shown in the accompanying illustration. The feature of this can which renders it non-explosive is a perforated zinc tube, placed in the filling hole. Inside this tube is a smaller tube, of the same material, and treated in the same manner. Wire gauze separates the two tubes. The tube is screwed down at the top. Between the cap, which secures the tube to the tank, is a gravity or safety valve. It is this little valve which does a great deal of the work in rendering the can non-explosive.

Non-Explosive Oil Can.

In the ordinary can when the pressure of the gas is so great that something must give way, there is an explosion. With the tube inserted in the can, the power of the gas is overcome. As soon as the gas begins to rise, overcoming the pressure on the outside of the can, the safety valve rises, permitting the gas to pour out. There is ignition, but no explosion. The tube, with its perforations, of course, concentrates the flame, preventing contact of the flame with the oil in the can.—Philadelphia Record.

Get the Song Habit.

Encouragement is offered by a high medical authority in a recent work to those people who have singing souls but "no voice," and who therefore hesitate to sing lest they disturb the tuneful equanimity of their friends. This scientific man says by all means sing, when you want to particularly, and acquire the habit of singing some every day, whether or not you are musically inclined. The reason for this recommendation is that singing develops and holds pervious the various passages and chambers of the respiratory tract from brow to diaphragm, and trains and practices in deep, full breathing. Entirely apart, therefore, from all idea of making vocalists, singing should be taught and practiced in the family circle by all, be the voices good, bad or indifferent.—Boston Globe.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

FOR SHERIFF.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county, subject to the action of the People's primary. FRANK GOODGAME.

FOR SHERIFF.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county, subject to the action of the people's primary. LEE HAYES.

FRANK GOODGAME

J. F. Goodgame, or Frank, as everybody in Chilton county who knows him terms him, has announced for Sheriff of our county. Mr. Goodgame has never asked nor held a county office, but has been a United States deputy marshal at two different times in the past few years, in which position he acquitted himself extremely well, his accounts being always clean, and he being entirely free from the practice of "making cases" and thus stirring up bitterness in communities and entailing large expense on accused persons for the sake of a paltry fee. He has always been an avowed Republican, but in the years that are past he voted and worked with the Populist party in Chilton, as all true Republicans did in behalf of the people's cause.

LEE HAYES.

Mr. Hayes has announced for Sheriff, as you will see by this issue. We can't tell our readers anything new about Mr. Hayes. You all know him and have for years, and it is up to you voters now. He has been Sheriff once before, and it is generally acknowledged that he was a good one.

FONVILLE ON CONTROVERSY.

The following is an extract from J. C. Fonville's letter in the Montgomery Journal of the 28th inst.:

* * * * * * * * * * *

"I understand that Bro. Adams wants a third term in the office of Commissioner of Agriculture.

"The other two terms were rather unprofitable. It is possible some good, honest Christian gentleman got his salary in '92-'96.

"Bro. Adams is a good Baptist and has fallen into a way of forgiveness that is beautiful.

"If he is about to get his due, I infer that there has been a falling out among the Christian gentlemen who robbed him in the bygone years.

"I reckon Bro. Adams will vote for Senator Morgan to succeed himself, but I don't see how he can vote for Mr. Comer at the same time, for I recollect Bro. Adams as a man of positive convictions and the Roman youth courage to 'burn his arm off' if occasion required."

S. J. BOWIE OUT OF RACE FOR CONGRESS.

Anniston, Ala., May 26.—Congressman S. J. Bowie tonight declined to run again for Congress from the Fourth district, and gave out the following card:

"To the People of the Fourth Congressional District:

"It is with no ordinary feeling of regret that I have reached the conclusion not to be a candidate for re-election as your representative in Congress. The education of my children and the duty and obligation I owe to my family make it necessary that I should resume the practice of my profession. I cannot, however, make such an announcement without at the same time acknowledging the deep sense of obligation and gratitude which I feel for your partiality in choosing me for three times as your representative in the greatest law-making body in the world, and I feel all the greater sense of obligation that apparently I could receive a fourth nomination from my party unopposed.

"Conscious myself of my own deficiencies, it has fallen to my pleasant lot to represent a generous constituency which has ever been swift to approve and slow to censure. My own party has been kind and generous in the fullest degree, and the Republican party, while opposing me in the last two elections, has never struck a blow below the belt, and I number many of its adherents as my warm personal friends. Under these circumstances it would have been unnatural had I not hesitated long in reaching a conclusion. I feel, however, that my duty is clear. I have given six of the best years of my life to the public service, with what degree of ability and fidelity you are the judges. I feel that if I am ever to return to my profession it should be now. I have given to your service the best that was in me. And at the end of my present term I shall return your commission not only with the deepest sense of personal obligation, but feeling that no man was ever called to represent a nobler or a more generous constituency.

"SIDNEY J. BOWIE."

In an interview after giving out the above card, Mr. Bowie stated that he had been offered and had accepted a partnership to practice law with E. H. Cabaniss, of Birmingham. Mr. Bowie said he expected, however, while not a candidate for re-election, to fill out the balance of his unexpired term.

A REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMAN.

Hon. S. J. Bowie in refusing to run again for Congress in this district opens the way wide for the Fourth to resume its place in the Republican ranks. Many of us had so high a personal regard for Mr. Bowie, and he has been so courteous in attending to requests from his Republican constituents, that we could not get up a real hot opposition to him. Hon. W. F. Aldrich represented us in Congress for a number of terms, and we still think he could have been re-elected in 1900 if he had made the race, but he positively refused to accept the nomination; so the case went by default, as it were. This district is naturally Republican, and the growth of manufacturing enterprises and diffusion of general knowledge in the past few years has swept away much of the old senseless prejudice that once existed, and our people realize as never before that the Republican party is the party of progress and "does things" that benefit the people. Many in the past have voted the Democratic ticket and in their heart hoped the Republicans would win. The Fourth district is composed of the counties of Chilton, Shelby, Calhoun, Cleburne, Talladega and Dallas. Now, let's get together and nominate a good man, and we'll carry the district "hands down." The time has come for action. We must be up and doing.

A GROWING BUSINESS.

M. J. Barrett, owner of the large dairy just north of Thorsby advertises his present stock of cows for sale (see this notice) and will put in all thoroughbred Jerseys. As he says, "I'm after better stock, and more of it." Mr. Barrett is now a large shipper of fine butter, and gets the highest price for his product. He knows his business and attends to it, and has satisfied himself that there is big money in this country for good dairies. He does something in the line of good pigs also. Go and look at his stock and place.

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY.

To Hon. S. L. Weaver, Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of Alabama: We, the grand jury empaneled for the spring term, 1906, of the Circuit Court of Chilton county, beg leave to submit this our final report:

We have investigated a very large number of cases, and as a result of this investigation have returned into your honor's court forty-four indictments.

As a further result of the above investigation we find that a large majority of the violations of law in this county are directly attributable to the illegal sale of liquor. In a number of the towns and communities in this county we are convinced that the sale of whisky is carried on to a shameful extent. We have found it very difficult to secure evidence in connection with this class of crime, and we respectfully urge the good citizens of this county to assist future grand juries in the suppression of the sale of liquor, which we again repeat is the direct cause of a majority of the crime committed in the county, and we may add that but for the sale of whisky our county would not have such heavy criminal dockets.

From reports made to this body we find the public roads in fair condition, but desire to urge the proper officers to use all efforts to improve the same.

We have examined the several bonds of our county officers, and are satisfied that the same are good and sufficient. We have examined the books and records of the several county officers as best we could in the limited time at our command, and as far as we can determine they are correctly and neatly kept, especially those of the County Superintendent of Education.

We find from the report of the County Treasurer that there is a cash balance on hand of $4,449.52. This report or statement is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

The committee from this body appointed to visit and investigate the county poor house report that they find the bedding of the inmates in very bad condition; that new springs are needed and that the beds should be made more comfortable; that the floors should be cleaned oftener than just prior to the meeting of the grand jury, and that some effort should be made to get rid of the bed bugs.

We regret to see so large an amount of land advertised for sale for taxes. We have made inquiry into this matter, and we find the cause is brought about by the failure to assess the lands owned by tax payers. Whether the tax payer failed to furnish the Tax Assessor with the correct description of his lands or the Assessor failed to correctly copy the description so furnished we are unable to say. We are convinced, however, that our present Tax Assessor has used every means at his command to correctly assess land from the information furnished to him. We find that our county tax officers, in connection with the Court of County Commissioners, have discharged their duty, and we would suggest that in the future, where tax payers are not familiar with the numbers of their land, that they carry their deeds to the Tax Assessor and avoid mistakes.

It is with pleasure that we congratulate our Commissioners upon the improvements in the county court house and jail. We now have a jail in which prisoners may be confined without detriment to their health, and we have a court house in which there is ample space not only for the county officers, but also for the use of our courts. We would, however, suggest to our Court of County Commissioners that they take such steps as will result in the court house being properly lighted.

We beg to say that in connection with our examination of the offices of the Circuit Clerk and Sheriff we find that executions in State cases have been issued by the clerk for the sum of $625, and that only the sum of $110 has been colected, as shown by returns made to the clerk. Our Sheriff informs us that these amounts were promised him by responsible parties, who failed to make the expected payments. We are sure no loss will be sustained by the State or county, but would suggest that in the future the Sheriff insist upon the prompt payment of all executions placed in his hands for the use of the state or county.

We desire to thank your honor for the able charge given us and by following which we have been able to more fully discharge our duty. We also desire to thank our able Solicitor for the assistance so kindly rendered, and our bailiff for the promptness with which he has discharged his duty.

Having now completed our duties we respectfully beg to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,

W. A. REYNOLDS,
Foreman.

SOME CHURCHES.

Editor Union:

Please publish this for me. I've been attending church at Mars Hill, Pleasant Grove, Macedonia and Collins' Chapel and have heard from Rehoboth. These are four of the best churches in Chilton and one of the best in Bibb county, and have the services of our beloved brother, J. H. Thomas. The members are very proud of their pastor. He is above criticism, and it is generally conceded that we have the best preacher that has ever been in this country. There are new organs at Mars Hill and Pleasant Grove, and all the churches have fine Sunday schools and singing societies. So you see the moss is falling off our backs, and I'm sure that if we can manage to hold our present pastor a few years longer all of our churches will be painted and have a bell for the Sunday school. May the Lord bless this good work, and may it be the means of our children having good churches and a happy country when we have crossed over. Best wishes to The Union.

LOVER OF CHURCHES.

CLANTON.

Mr. Editor:

I've been thinking what a time we Populists and Republicans in Chilton would have had if we had taken all the advice and followed the instructions we've had in the last few years from some office-seekers. One week we'd have been "cussing" the Democratic party, and the next week we'd have been bragging on it and 'cussing" the other fellow; and then we'd have been out of politics altogether and very likely have emigrated away down to the sunny land of Florida, making $200 per acre out of strawberries, and in a week or two we'd have been back in Chilton begging for an office before we even had our right to vote in Alabama restored. You know this new constitution is hard on people who move about. You see there is a provision in it that any one must be a citizen of this State for two years before he is entitled to vote. This clause was put there to catch the poor laboring man, but if we'd have moved off we'd have lost our citizenship just the same. How glad I am that we've not followed all the good (?) advice we've had. Some are advising us now to go into the Democratic party and not disfranchise ourselves by staying out. Such advice as this is enough to give a Texas pony the colic. I really think some folks are nearer being disfranchised than we are, and some of these folks that have so much advice to spare will realize that we Populists and Republicans are not disfranchised before this election is over. There is one thing strange to me, something that I can't understand to save my life, and that is about these people that shed so many tears over us and, maybe so, many a time while we're asleep at the dead hour of midnight they're groaning about our condition and weeping (crocodile tears) because we are about to disfranchise ourselves by not going into the Democratic primary. But as I was about to say, the strange thing to me is this, that they never advise us or warn us of approaching danger except when they want something and must have our help if they get it. To a man up a tree if seems like it's the bait we have in our pockets that they want. I tell you we old farmers get mighty suspcious at such times, for if these fellows love us so much we think they should look after us all the time, not just when they have to have our help to get something they want. The Democratic party ought to be satisfied with the cast-offs we give them once in a while, so that the party will have somebody to lead and advise it. You know a bad Populist or Republican will match up pretty well with the bulk of the Democratic ringsters, and they ought to be mighty grateful to us, even if we are better off without them. You see this is about what they are saying, "We Democrats thank you Populists and Republicans from the very depths of our hearts for the 'exes' you've given us, for by their help we're going to have a mass meeting, and it will save us a lot of trouble; besides we won't have so many fellows to contend with as if we were to have a primary, for you know some of these county Democrats think they know what they want better than we, their leaders, do, and they get hard-headed and unruly." "But in a mass meeting just a few of us smart fellows can get together and fixe up a ticket and put it through without any trouble, for we'll all be there at the mass meeting, for we can even walk over the top of a locomotive while it is running in this town." Oh! when I think of the great privileges we who live in Clanton enjoy I fall all over myself. It is wonderful what advantages we enjoy over these ignorant country folks. Why even our religion is cheaper, and a heap less trouble, for we don't have to get on our knees to pray. We can just bow our heads and look sort of sorry, but you all have to weep and pray on your knees. In a few days we will have a telephone in our houses here, and then we can sit by the phone at home and hear the preacher without going to church, and then we won't even have to look sorry. And then here is Vanderveer with his electric lights nearly ready to turn on, and then we can turn night into day. If you all can't come to Clanton to stay, just come and see what we've got, so you can realize how blessed we are. Now, then, old farmers, you have stood the frost of many winters, and my advice to you is to keep your ears open, your eyes skinned and your powder dry. When you hear these fellows talk who are so anxious about your condition just stop and think and you'll soon see that they just want to use you and break up your organization so that you'll have no protection left. It's just like the old song, "Will you step into my parlor? said the spider to the fly, it's the prettiest little parlor that ever you did spy." You all will remember what hapened to the fool fly when he did step in and the big-bellied spider got hold of him, don't you? JUST A VOTER.

Bank Your Saving's With a Safe Bank.

Every man, woman and child, no matter where they live, should have a savings account with the Citizens' Savings bank of Birmingham, for the following reasons:

It is the only bank of importance in the state which confines its banking business strictly to savings accounts and accepts no commercial business. The banking laws of Alabama provide that where a bank doing both a savings and general banking business becomes insolvent, the depositors who had not accumulated for interest (commercial) will have preference over those who had their money in the bank for savings—in other words, the savings depositors can't be paid a cent until the commercial depositors have been paid in full.

We take no trade risks; all our loans are made on first mortgages improved real estate mortgages or other gilt-edge collateral security—our motto being "The strength of a bank is in its individual loans."

These things, backed up by our cash capital and responsibility of our board of directors and the long and successful experiences of our officers in the banking business, renders our bank as safe as United States bonds.

Bank with us by mail. It is easy and safe. Write for information.

Office hours from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. every day.

ENTERPRISE.

Mr. Editor:

Mr. L. B. Pounds was here last Saturday, and he sure gave our folks a fine lecture on unionism. He spoke an hour and a half, and then we were sorry he couldn't go on longer. Our people all say they were mightily interested and hope that Bro. Pounds will come back some time and give another talk. I think we've got as hard working a little union as this county can show. Every member seems to be a union man all over and through and through, and Bro. Pounds just made them stronger than ever. Well, we farmers have got to go to work now or quit in the grass, one of the two. Crops down here look like it was about April. J. A. Boockholdt and his father left for Montgomery last Wednesday, and the old gentleman returned Friday, leaving J. A. under the care of Dr. Hill. We hope he will come out all right. Mr. and Mrs. W. Y. Keel are very happy over their twin babies, which were born last Thursday. Success to The Union and its many readers. OLD LOBSTER.

People from all over the county and a number from Shelby and Bibb counties attended the meeting. Mr. Parker, the State lecturer, delivered a good address. The forenoon session was for the public, while a secret meeting was held in the afternoon. Dinner was served on the grounds to about 200 people. The ladies of the United Protestant Church sold ice cream and berries that day and realized a neat little sum....Those who attended the box social given by the boys of the ball team report a good time. WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, the Father of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

CAL CLARK'S CHANCE

BY W. CRAWFORD SHERLOCK

(Copyright, 1906, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Five feet one was the height of Cal Clark and this was only when he stood upon his good leg. When he rested upon his short, twisted limb, it was with difficulty that he could reach the five foot mark. In addition to the misfortune of having legs of uneven length, Cal possessed a peculiarity of vision that enabled him to get around during the day, although not permitting the luxury of reading or writing. When the shades of night fell or when he was subjected to artificial light, the poor fellow was as blind as a bat.

His situation had once been very serious indeed. Unable to secure any work on account of his afflictions and the slender store of money he had inherited from his father, having become exhausted, he was weighing deeply the advisability of seeking a home in the almshouse. Just what steps were requisite to secure admission to this institution, was a poser to Cal, although he knew full well it must be done. He made his wish known to his only friend, Jim Collins, a hardworking mechanic, but the latter would not listen to such a plan.

"Not much, Cal, my boy," declared the stalwart Jim, glancing kindly at his diminutive friend, "no poorhouse for you while I've got a home to share with you. My wife will be glad to have you and you can do lots of things around home to help us out."

After some hesitation, Cal accepted the kind offer, resolving to do everything he could in return for the home he would have. It was remarkable how much he was able to do to help. Taking care of the children, running errands, sawing wood, bringing up coal, besides a multitude of minor duties, composed his daily tasks and Mrs. Collins soon grew to be very fond of the little man, who would do anything sooner than eat the bread of dependence.

Cal's chief delight was in the evenings after Jim returned from work. The supper dishes cleared away and the children tucked snugly into bed, the two men would sit with their pipes, Jim reading and Cal listening, to the evening paper. Then a discussion of current events would follow, in which the little man would take an active part, for, despite his lack of advantages and his afflictions, he possessed a bright mind.

Thus they lived until an event occurred that came near upsetting the arrangements of the little home. Jim was taken ill; his malady developed into a dangerous fever that prostrated him for weeks. He was one of those easy-going men who took life as it came and it so happened that there had been very little provision made for a rainy day. Matters grew serious, the little stock of money became exhausted and Mrs. Collins was at her wits' end to secure more. She could not work herself, the care of Jim and the children prevented that. How was help to come?

The answer came from the most unexpected source. Cal shrewdly guessed that affairs were in a critical state and at once blamed himself for it. Had it not been for the added expense he had caused, the family would have been able to lay aside sufficient to carry them over the period of Jim's illness. He was the cause of it all and upon him rested the responsibility of relieving the situation.

What could he do to get money? Cal scratched his head until the bald spot grew bigger and the wrinkles on his forehead deepened. He would try to secure work, but where could he get it? He felt that, under the present circumstances, at least, it would be best for him to live with Jim because he knew Mrs. Collins could not do without him when her husband was sick, but when Jim was well, he determined to go away somewhere. Day after day, Cal sought for employment but without success. Some laughed at him, others jeered him, while others offered him such work as he could not do, but no one was willing to give the poor unfortunate a chance to earn money. Cal grew disheartened, then despondent. His heart was so full of gratitude to his friends for their kindness that he yearned to repay his debt in this hour of sore need.

At last he hit upon a plan and one day returned home with a handful of money, mostly pennies, but here and there a stray dime and nickel. This he proudly placed on the table and called Mrs. Collins to count it.

"Why, Cal, where in the world did you get all this money?" she questioned, after finding out there was over a dollar in the pile.

"I got it honestly, ma'am," returned the little man, but he would furnish no information as to the source from which the money came. Mrs. Collins was too glad to get it to worry much about the matter. Each day thereafter, Cal returned with a supply of money, sometimes more and sometimes less than on the first day, but never without any. By careful management, Mrs. Collins made the slender amount of cash suffice for all their wants and Cal, realizing that he was now the provider, was the happiest little man in town.

Slowly Jim grew stronger and at length was able to return to work. Then Cal disappeared. His friend sought for him but, for a long time, could find no trace of the lame, half-blind man. He seemed to have left the face of the earth. One day, Jim heard of a man, answering his friend's description though bearing a different name, who had been sent to the almshouse. Thither Jim went and found Cal Clark registered under the name of Thomas Burns.

"What does this mean, Cal?" demanded Jim, somewhat sternly. "Why did you leave home and come here?"

"Twasn't my fault, Jim," pleaded Cal, holding his friend's hand as if he did not intend to part with it. "They'll tell if I don't, so I will. You see, Jim, when money got scarce at home, I knew it was all my fault. So I started to get some. The only way I could do, was to beg for it and this I did. It's strange people will give you money for charity but they won't give a fellow a chance to earn it. That's how I did until the day you went back to work when the police took me up and sent me here. Now, Jim, as I'm here, you'd better let me stay, will you?"

"Not much, Cal," returned Jim, forcing a big lump down his throat and turning his head away. "You'll go back with me."

Why Gordon Wright Quit.

Once when Gordon Wright, the Faneuil Hall market man, was called upon for a speech at a certain political meeting, he declined, much to the surprise of those present, as he was always ready to speak when called upon. After much urging he gave this reason for refusing:

"I'm all done with public speaking, boys. I used to think I could get up a pretty good speech, but a short time ago there was a movement to give the market superintendent an increase of salary. George is a good fellow, and I thought he deserved it, so I went to the meeting that was held and made what I considered a first-rate speech; said everything I could think of in George's favor. When I concluded I felt perfectly sure that the increase would be granted, but somehow it wasn't.

"Next day I met the superintendent, but, instead of the word of commendation I expected, he said, 'Darn you, if you had kept your mouth shut I'd have got more pay.'"—Boston Herald.

SNAKE BIRD MADE FINE PET.

Readily Tamed and Faithful in Its Attachment.

The snake bird is readily tamed when taken young. The Rev. John Bachman, who reared some of these birds, said: "My best pet was tame from the beginning of its captivity, and followed me about the house, the yard and garden, until I thought it quite troublesome, in consequence of its peculiar attachment to me. It is a fearless bird, keeping at bay the hens and turkeys in the yard, and never sparing any dog that chanced to pass by it, dealing blows right and left with its sharp-pointed bill, and occasionally posting itself in the trough where they are fed, to prevent them from taking a morsel of food until he has tantalized them sufficiently, then he leaves them to share whatever he does not relish.

"It was not until my bird was fully fledged that I found it willing or anxious to go to the water, and then whenever it saw me going toward the pond it accompanied me as far as the gate, seeming to say, 'Pray let me go.' On my opening this gate it at once followed me, waddling like a duck, and no sooner was it in sight of its favorite element than it immediately let itself in, not with a plunge or a dive, but by dropping from a plank into the stream, where for a while it would swim like a duck, then dipping its long neck it would dive for the purpose of procuring fish.

"This bird sleeps in the open air, and during warm weather perches on the house or the bars of the fence, with its head under its wings, placed there from above its back, and in rainy weather it often sits in that same place for nearly the whole day. It appears to be very susceptible to cold, retreating to the kitchen, and near the fire, battling with the dogs or the cooks for the most desirable place on the hearth."—Forest and Stream.

The Prospect of Death.

Why am I loath to leave this earthly scene?
Have I so found it full of pleasing charms?
Some drops of joy with draughts of ill between;
Some gleams of sunshine 'mid renewing storms.
Is it departing pangs my soul alarms?
Or death's unlovely, dreary, dark abode?
For guilt, for guilt, my terrors are in arms;
I tremble to approach an angry God,
And justly smart beneath his sin-avenging rod.

Fain would I say: "Forgive my foul offense."
Fain promise never more to disobey.
But should my Author health again dispense,
Again I might desert fair virtue's way;
Again in folly's path might go astray;
Again exalt the brute and sink the man;
Then how should I for heavenly mercy pray,
Who act so counter heavenly mercy's plan?
Who sin so oft have mourned, yet to temptation ran?

O thou great Governor of all below!—
If I may dare a lifted eye to thee,—
Thy nod can make the tempest cease to blow,
Or still the tumult of the raging sea;
With that controlling power assist even me
Those headlong, furious passions to confine,
For all unfit I feel my powers to be
To rule their torrents in the allowed line;
O, aid me with Thy Help, Omnipotence Divine!

—Robert Burns.

An Eye to Business.

Senator Clay of Georgia in condemning certain underhand and mean business methods, said:

"Such methods remind me of a woman whom I heard of in my boyhood.

"This woman was mean and tricky. One day at the beginning of Lent she called her cook upstairs and said:

"'Jane, I am grieved to see how you are carrying on with the butcher's young man.'

"'Oh, he's a very decent, nice, honorable person, George is, ma'am,' Jane replied. 'I assure you, ma'am, I couldn't keep better company.'

"'That may be, Jane,' the woman interrupted, 'but I think you should consult our interests more. Why shouldn't you, now that it is Lent, get up a little flirtation with the fish dealer?'"

Had His Crown Now.

"The late Paul Lawrence Dunbar, the negro poet," said an editor, "once addressed a Sunday school in New York. I heard the address. It was delightful. An odd incident happened, though at its end—an incident that Dunbar laughed at as heartily as the rest of us.

"Dunbar, toward the close of his remarks, said:

"'And, my little friends, if you do all these things some day you will wear a gold crown. Yes, each of you, some day will wear a gold crown.'

"A little chap on the front row, catching the poet's friendly eye, piped:

"'My faver wears one now.'

"'No!' said the poet.

"'Yes, he does—on his toof,' said the little chap."

Why Man's Love Cools.

They had been married but two months, and they still loved each other devotedly. He was in the back yard blacking his boots.

"Jack!" she called, at the top of her voice. "Jack, come here, quick!"

He knew at once that she was in danger. He grasped a stick and rushed up two flights of stairs to the rescue. He entered the room breathlessly, and found her looking out of the window.

"Look!" she said. "That's the kind of a bonnet I want you to buy me."

New Yorker Owns Famous Banner.

Mr. Eben Appleton of New York city has in his possession the famous "Star Spangled Banner" that inspired Key to the writing of the much-admired national song. An effort will shortly be made to purchase the house in Baltimore in which this flag was made and use it as a museum or patriotic shrine.

DITSON MADE AN IMPRESSION.

Irishman Admitted Explanation as He Understood It.

Years ago members of my family laughed over this incident as related by an eye-witness, says a writer in the Boston Herald:

On approaching his store one morning, Oliver Ditson, the music publisher, saw a crowd gathering just outside his door, where a very much intoxicated Irishman was trying in vain to step up from the street. Mr. Ditson, seeing the inability of the man to gain the sidewalk, took him by the arm and assisted him up. The intoxicated man was effusive in his thanks, and insisted upon knowing to whom he was indebted for so much kindness.

In vain Mr. Ditson tried to disengage his arm, and at last he said: "Well, I am Mr. Ditson."

"Is that so?" said the other. "I never heard of him. Whose son did you say you were?"

A shout from the bystanders evidently nettled Mr. Ditson, and he said, very decidedly and impressively: "I am Oliver Ditson."

The manner was not lost upon the Irishman, who cast an admiring eye upon Mr. Ditson's immaculate apparel, and said, in the most humble and conciliatory tone: "So you are, so you are, while I am nothing but all-over-mud."

Cake Agreed With Him.

Little Algy was invited over to the neighbor's for dinner and the first thing that caught his eyes was a big cream cake. He declined soup, fish and turkey, anad his hosts feared he was so bashful he would not eat.

"Now, Algy, what are you going to have?" he was asked.

"Cake."

He was given a generous slice, and in an incredibly short space of time it had disappeared.

"What will you have now, Algy?" he was asked.

"Cake."

Another piece went the way of the first.

"Would you like something else, Algy?"

"More cake."

"I am afraid you will have bad dreams if you eat so much of that rich cake." Algy was silent.

"Can't I give you something else?"

"No, cake."

"Well, you can have one more piece, but I know you will have bad dreams."

The next morning early Algy appeared at the door of his late hosts. "I just came over to tell you that I didn't dream nothing," he remarked. "Can I have some more cake?"—Chicago American.

A Girl Named Daniel.

Daniel Casey is dead and the nurses at Sloan Maternity Hospital are mourning. Daniel was the tiniest baby born at Sloan last year. The mother died at the child's birth and the father brought a priest to christen the mite of humanity. When asked for a name he scratched his head, thought some time, then stammered, "Call it Dan'l." So with the ceremony of the Church the little one received the name of Daniel. But, alas, Daniel was a girl.

For four months Daniel was the prize incubator baby of the hospital. She grew and flourished, and at the end of that time the pound and a half she weighed at birth had increased to five. She was the most astonishing looking little creature, with solemn blue eyes, a round bullet head and stiff black hair. The nurses all adored her and spare moments in their busy days were spent with her. Finally she outgrew her incubator and in a few weeks was sufficiently inured to the outside world to leave the hospital. But the orphanage was too great a change for the frail little mite, and a few weeks ago Daniel Casey died.—Montreal Herald.

Susan B. Anthony as Cook.

Mrs. John Maule tells a characteristic little story of the late Susan B. Anthony.

"I was a young mother with two babies—only a year's difference between them"—she said, "when Miss Anthony came to Fairmount, Neb., where we lived, to lecture, and was sent by the committee to our house to be entertained. I was delighted to have her, but, nevertheless it takes close figuring for a young housewife with two babies and no maid to entertain a guest properly.

"I got up early with thoughts intent upon breakfast, and had the two babies in the kitchen in their night clothes, when Miss Anthony came in, fresh and full of vitality.

"'Now,' said she, "you get the breakfast and I'll wash and dress the babies. Or rather, no,' she exclaimed, 'you wash and dress the babies and I'll get the breakfast. Let it never be said of me that I separated a mother from her children.'"

Ropes of Ancient Origin.

Ropes made of various kinds of fiber and leather are of very ancient date. Ropes of palm have been found in Egypt in the tombs of Beni-Hassan (about 3000 B. C.), and on the walls of these tombs is also shown the process of preparing hemp. In a tomb at Thebes of the time of Thotmes III. (about 1600 B. C.) is a group representing the process of twisting thongs of leather and the method of cutting leather into thongs.

No Englishman a Leader.

It has been noted as a curious fact that at the present time no party in the English house of commons is led by an Englishman. The prime minister, the leader of the opposition and the leader of the labor party are Scots and the Irish and Welsh contingents of course have their own leaders.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF DOGS

I have seen a few wretches in my day, but I never saw one so utterly lost to decency that he could not be flattered by the friendly attentions of a strange dog. There is a great lesson in that. No matter how superior we try to seem to ourselves and others, a small voice within us will not let us wholly forget what humbugs we are. In the presence of our kind we are brazen. The calm gaze of a child sometimes shakes our self-confidence; the knowing look of a dog shatters it. There is somewhat in brute psychology that perplexes the intellect of man and disorganizes his intuition. Man is so made that what he cannot understand exercises greater influence over him than that which he can. In the presence of many phenomena he reveals himself openly and quite unconsciously. He is then no longer master of the fortifications of his soul. He drops his mask—his grotesque outer garb—his brazen shield falls to the ground, and he either cowardly retreats or succumbs without resistance.

There is some hope for the man who is capable of feeling ashamed in the presence of an honorable dog. The man has avenues open to him for advancement. His soul is capable of expansion. His brain is [illegible] more than a dried nut. His heart is not turned entirely into a mass of rubber and valves. When a strange dog greets him he thinks to himself. Unconsciously he says: "Villian that I am, I am not to be fooled after all as I might be. To fool a dog, and a dog is no judge; therefore, I have good in me that he recognizes." The fellow is surprised at himself, and not a little flattered. If a noble dog shows him marked favor he becomes noble almost immediately. If several dogs should display great preference and affection for his person he would become unendurable to society as too vain for association with. Contrariwise, should dogs bark at him generally, or, perchance, should one bite him, he would not feel himself good enough to associate with mankind, but would forthwith get himself locked up as a victim of rabies; and if he had any kinfolk at large they would probably insist upon having the dog put to death.—The Culturist.

HOW HEART AFFECTS WATCH

Nobody would ever think that something the matter with him would cause something to be the matter with his watch, but a watch maker is the cause of much uneasiness in an East End family, and all because he insists that he does his best with a certain watch and that the reason it does not keep good time is because the man who carries it must have an irregular heart beat.

It came about in this wise: The head of the family has a gold watch that cost him $200 ten years ago. He has carried it ever since, but a year ago it began to act queerly. For some days it lost time, and then it began to gain time; again it would gain time mysteriously and then strangely lose a minute or two a day. It had been to the watch repairer three times in twelve months, and was still acting irregularly a week ago when the man's wife took it to the watchmaker.

"I think I know what is the matter with this watch," said the craftsman. "I don't believe that your husband's heart beats regularly. Now, don't get alarmed. It is not necessarily disease. He may be just one of those men who can't have a watch that keeps good time, simply because their irregular heart beats.

"You see, a watch has a rhythmic movement," said the maker. "It is carried close to a man heart, which ought to beat regular, rhythmic movement. Now, while the watch is being carried the heart is beating also. If the pulsations occur regularly, provided the rhythm of the watch also regular intervals, the rhythm of the movement is undisturbed; but if the heart pulsations occur irregularly, pulsating with the tick of the watch, again stopping discordantly between the ticks, the watch is bound to be affected. Leave the watch and let your husband call for watch, which, we know, keeps good time. Let him wear it a week and see if I am not right."

So the woman handed her husband her watch to note the result. He wanted him to consult a watchmaker, but he compromised by agreeing to try the test suggested by the watchman.—Pittsburg Gazette.

WILES OF THE SALESMAN

"Stick to it," said the salesman, "is my motto. It's a good one in any business. This is how it works out:

"I represent a wholesale provision firm, dealing only in the finest grades of goods, with high class buyers. Among my best customers in and about New York are the railroads.

"One of the first important sales I made was to the buyer for the dining service of one of the biggest roads running into the city. I went straight to the big man's office, told him what I had and did my best to make a sale.

"Nothing doing. My eloquence did not impress the big man a bit. Finally, he ordered me out of the office. By that time he was mad and I was mad, but he had the bulge on me and, escorted by an attendant, I went.

"But I was bound to land that fish. It was in the midforenoon that we had our stormy interview, but I waited at the main door of the office until I saw my man go out to dinner; then I followed him.

"He went to an exceedingly swell dining place, but I walked in at his heels and took a seat at the table with him. He appeared not to recognize me when I spoke to him, but as soon as I opened up on the subject of line he spotted me.

"Oh!" he exclaimed, and then added; then suddenly his face broke into a smile and a twinkle in his eye told me I'd won.

"'You've got me,' he owned up before we left the table he'd given a big order.

"Ever since then he's been one of my best and pleasantest customers. I simply tired him out. I wore him down.

"There's another big market which I do a big business in, and still harder to land. Every time I called on the manager of the system, only to be told that I was wasting time.

"Well, I kept on wasting time Saturday regularly, for two years. Finally, the manager gave an order, just to get rid of me. The goods did the rest, and the first order accounts for a big chunk of the commission to-day.

"Stick to it does the trick. It's nerve, and a little tact in addition."

WAS WITHIN HIS RIGHTS

A western lawyer says that he was once in a court in Missouri when a young man most fastidiously dressed sauntered into the temple of justice. None of the officials of the court had ever seen him before, and as the proceedings were unimportant and somewhat tedious, it chanced that the stranger attracted some attention. On his part he eyed the judge narrowly, "sized up" all the attorneys, drummed loudly on the bench in front of him and finally rose and sauntered up to the bar, where he poured out for himself a glass of iced water.

The judge presiding, a nervous and testy old fellow, had himself observed the young man and by his frowns had given evidence of his disapproval. When the stranger had boldly marched up to the bar and had taken the water, it looked as if the judge would boil over with indignation at this exhibition of temerity, amounting almost to contempt. "That water, sir," roared the judge, "is for attorneys and other officials of this court."

Whereupon the stranger turned red and left the room. But the court was to see more for in about half an hour he was bearing in his hand a roll of parchment. The judge now glared at him in the most savage manner, but the young man flinched not. Then, during a lull in the proceedings, the eccentric young person addressed the court:

"Your honor!"

"What is it, sir?"

"I wish, your honor, to present this honorable court my credentials, admission to practice in the supreme court and all other courts of the state."

"Well, what of that?" queried the honor.

"Simply this, younr honor, that I have presented the proper credentials to the court that I be permitted to speak from the official pitcher."

The young attorney got his way.—Lippincott's Magazine.

IN THE DIAMOND'S RAYS

Held in the hollow of your hand
It flames with unconsuming fire;
Strange lights you do not understand
Play in its heart and never tire;
Now luminous with silver white,
Then fainting into shifting hues
And wondrous tintings shot with light—
A glory that it cannot lose.

What is it? Hidden in the earth
Through unknown centuries it slept
And still the secret of its birth
In the unfathomed past is kept.
A toy to please a pagan's eyes,
A gaud to deck a diadem—
Deep in its heart forever lies
The glow which makes of it a gem.

Mayhap a thousand thousand years
Are echoed in the light it gives—
The subtle light which shifts, and veers,
And jurks, and leaps, and laughs, and lives;
But whence came its immortal fire
That neither burns, nor chars—
Caught from the sunset's [illegible]
And from the dream light [illegible]

It is enough to know that [illegible]
In this small space are [illegible]
pent
The summer suns of year [illegible]
With all the fairest colors [illegible]
The charm of roses in the [illegible]
The glint of distant hills [illegible]
And outspreads silent skies [illegible]
Are in this time old jewel [illegible]

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 3.

The Gentile Woman's Faith [illegible]. 26-30—Golden Text: Matt. [illegible]—Memory Verse, 30—Topic: [illegible] the Unmoved to Christ.

In heathen borders (v. 24). 24. Thence He arose." That is, after hearing the discourses at Capernaum. "Borders of Tyre and Sidon." Tyre and Sidon were heathen cities on the coast of the Mediterranean [illegible]. Their religion was a base and [illegible]ng nature worship. Beelzebub, a name adopted by the Jews as a name for Satan, was one of their deities [illegible] was supposed to be the author of the pollutions of idol worship." [illegible] house." In all probability the [illegible] a Jew. Edersheim thinks He [illegible]re tarried here several days; [illegible] that He desired to be kept [illegible] could not, would suggest this. [illegible]n knew it." He judged it prudent [illegible]onceal Himself awhile from the [illegible]s, who were plotting against [illegible]. Could not be hid." It seems [illegible] was personally known to many [illegible] country, who had seen and [illegible]im in Galilee.

A mother's request (vs. 25, 26). [illegible]Those young daughter." The [illegible]sufferings of the daughter were [illegible]but the sufferings which the [illegible]endured by sympathy were still [illegible]. "An unclean spirit." Matthew says her daughter was "grievously vexed with a devil." This was [illegible]y a sad case. Nothing can destroy the peace of a home more than [illegible]a daughter possessed with Satanic influences. The spirit that possessed this girl was an unclean—a vile one. "At His feet." This at once [illegible]he humility of the woman. "Woman was a Greek." By [illegible]re. The Jews called those who [illegible]olaters Greeks, or Gentiles. "A Syrophenician by nation." A Syrophenician. Phoenicia belonged to the province Syria. She was a Syrophenician. Phoenicia. Matthew says she was a woman of Canaan." "Besought Him." Earnestly entreated. [illegible]The case was an urgent one, [illegible] her knees at His feet she [illegible]out her request. "Would cast [illegible]. She believed He had power to [illegible]. Matthew says she "cried unto Him, saying, Have mercy on me, O [illegible]Thou son of David." She pleaded [illegible]ercy; she knew she could make [illegible]m upon Him in any other way. [illegible]devil," etc. Here is a plain, [illegible]forward confession. There is [illegible]rt to cover up the family trouble [illegible]d gloss over matters, and make [illegible]ar that, after all, her daughter [illegible]e respectable."

Faith tested (v. 27). 27. "Jesus [illegible]. This woman's discouragements [illegible]reat: 1. Her advantages had [illegible]mall. She was a heathen woman [illegible]th but little means of even obtaining the light of the Hebrew Scriptures. 2. At first Jesus did not reply [illegible]request (Matt. 15:24). 3. When [illegible]did speak He seemed to repel [illegible]The soul seeking salvation frequently meets these same tests, and [illegible]become discouraged by them. [illegible]isciples were annoyed. They [illegible]Send her away, for she crieth after us." This has been greatly misunderstood. To "send her away" according to Oriental idioms would be to [illegible]her request, cure her child and [illegible]go. "The children." The Jews. [illegible]be filled." They were the favored [illegible]. The gospel was first to be offered to the Jews, and to them our Lord's personal ministry on earth was [illegible] restricted. "Not meet." It is not [illegible]ltable—not the proper thing to do. [illegible]Children's bread." To take those things that belong to the Jews and [illegible]the dogs." For "dogs" read "little dogs," household pets, such as [illegible]found the table at meal time. This was the severest test of all. The Gentiles were considered by the Jewish [illegible] as no better than dogs, and [illegible]only used a form of speech which was common; but it must have been very offensive to the heathen. Would the woman resent it? Would her pride [illegible]be stirred? No. She "shrunk not, but [illegible]riveled" into nothingness at His word, and her faith still held on for the [illegible]l blessing.

Faith rewarded (vs. 28-30). 28. "O Lord." "Truth, Lord" (Matt.). [illegible]all so. The Jews—the favored [illegible]ought to be blessed first. I know [illegible] a heathen—only a Gentile dog.

Now follows (1) an answer to [illegible]rgument against entertaining her [illegible]on, and (2) a most touching appeal [illegible]o His clemency. "The dogs—eat [illegible] children's crumbs." I only ask [illegible]kindness as the dogs of any family [illegible]joy. If I am a dog give me at [illegible]a dog's fare.

"For this saying." Her faith triumphed. Jesus said, "O woman, great is thy faith" (Matt.). Her faith [illegible]was "great in its earnestness, its [illegible]lty, its overcoming great obstacles. The hindrances thrown in the [illegible]n's way only tended to increase her faith. "The devil is gone out." [illegible]At this very moment, thy request [illegible]nted. Though our Lord's mission [illegible]to the lost sheep of Israel, yet He [illegible]a honored personal faith in Himself wherever found. Persevering faith [illegible]prayer are next to omnipotent. No [illegible]n can thus pray and believe without receiving all his soul requires. [illegible]woman had asked a crumb, and [illegible]received a whole loaf of the children's bread. Although a heathen she [illegible]took her place by the side of Jacob [illegible]Moses, for she had prevailed. [illegible]thy daughter." Her faith is peculiar [illegible]in that it obtains a blessing for another. Her intercession was successful. Children who have praying parents should be thankful. Here is also [illegible]encouragement for praying parents.

"Laid upon the bed." A sign of [illegible]perfectly tranquil condition; the [illegible]n had previously driven her hither [illegible]d thither.

HABITS OF THE HOUSE FLY.

Harold Segnra, M. S., Tells Whence He Comes, Whither He Goes.

The common house fly (Musca Domestica) is a creature of such secretive habits, that although from the very earliest times he has been with us, and the most ancient writers have mentioned and described him, still very little was known of his origin and history.

It remained for the eminent Boston biologist, Dr. A. S. Packard, in 1873, to make known his origin, habits and transformations from the egg through the larva state with its two changes to the pupa state, then to the perfect fly.

Near the first of August the female lays about 120 eggs of a dull gray color, selecting fresh horse manure in which to deposit her eggs, and so secretes them that they are rarely seen; it takes only twenty-four hours for them to hatch into the first form of larva, a white worm one-quarter of an inch in length and one-tenth in diameter. They feed on the decaying matter of their environment, and two changes or casting of skins occur before they turn into the pupa state; this change comes very suddenly. The entire period from the egg to the pupa state is from three to four days. If moist food is wanting when in this condition they will eat each other and thus decrease their number. Heat and humidity greatly assist their development, as upon careful computation each pound of manure around stables and outhouses develops under favorable conditions over one thousand flies. It is no wonder that where these conditions exist, we have such a veritable harvest of the fly pest.

In the pupa state when the fly is about to emerge, the end of the pupa case splits off, making a hole through which the fly pushes a portion of its head; but here it seems to encounter a difficulty; the pupa case is too stiff and hard to pass through, but nature comes to its assistance, and a sort of bladder like substance forms behind the head, which swells out apparently filled with air; it acts as a means of pushing away the pupa case and releases the fly. When the fly first emerges it runs around with its wings soft, small and baggy; it is pale and the colors are not set; its head rapidly expands and the bladder formation passes away—within a few hours the wings grow and harden, it is now a perfect fly.

The whole time from the depositing of the egg to the perfect fly is not over ten days in duration. Many persons who observe small flies in midsummer suppose they are the young, but such is not the case, they are flies that are imperfectly nourished in the larvae and pupae states, and do not attain full size, in fact, they are the dwarfs of their race. The male fly differs from the female in the front of the head between the eyes, being at least one-third narrower, though in size the female is rather smaller.

In the pupa state they are often fed upon by the larvae of some of the beetles, notably that of the carpet beetle, whose pupa, the dreaded buffalo "moth," will attack the young fly in the pupa case and eating it possess the case for itself.

Adult flies, like most other creatures, have parasites of minute size that prey upon them; these can often be seen as presenting small red specks over the body of the fly.

Another enemy in the form of a fungus often attacks the fly in the early autumn. This makes its appearance as a white swelling and the white spores of the disease can be seen penetrating the body of the fly, which it finally distends and ruptures.

The fly hibernates in winter, but with his usual secretive habit, it is very difficult to find him in his winter quarters. With the first chill of autumn the flies feeling the cold, seek temporary warmth in houses, and clustering together form bunches in the corners of walls and other places. They are then sluggish and not so active as in the warm weather. However, they do not make a permanent stay indoors, but on the first mild, sunny day, seek the windows to get out and find their permanent winter hiding place; many prefer to make their homes in the roots of grass on lawns where they hide themselves so effectually that the ice and snow of winter does not destroy them in their hibernating state. If in the first warm days of spring when the snow is gone and the grass on the lawns becomes dry and warm, long before the yellow dandelion shows its head, a close observer may see numbers of flies crawling up on the grass to get the welcome sunshine, their wings standing out stiff and useless; but they soon acquire the power of flight in the warm rays of the sun. A great many days, however, elapse before they appear in the homes of men, where they are such unwelcome visitors.

In recent years, the medical profession have demonstrated that while the fly itself does not propagate disease, it is one of the most industrious carriers of disease germs which by contact adhere to his feet, hairy legs and body, distributing them to innocent victims.

If every house-keeper could know all these interesting facts which have never before been brought to their attention, they would realise the importance of securing the very best fly exterminator.

Voracious Vultures.

Hungry vultures have attacked men and women in the Valley of Couchs, canton of Valais; a bull was so seriously injured in a fight with them that it had to be killed.

Cheapening the Doctors.

Women are to be admitted to be doctors of medicine by the University of Prague, which, however, refuses to admit them as doctors of philosophy.

Jefferson's Ten Maxims.

1. Never put off till tomorrow what you can do today.
2. Never trouble another for what you can do yourself.
3. Never spend your money before you have it.
4. Never buy what you do not want because it is cheap; it will be dear to you.
5. Pride costs us more than hunger, thirst and cold.
6. We never repent of having eaten too little.
7. Nothing is troublesome that we do willingly.
8. How much pain have cost us the evils which have never happened?
9. Take things always by their smooth handle.
10. When angry count ten before you speak; if very angry, a hundred.

West Indian Cotton.

Cotton cultivation is proving a great success in the British West Indies, according to the commissioner of agriculture for those colonies, the volume and quality of the product being extremely satisfactory. The bales exported in 1905 were 3,956, against 2,546 in 1904, the sea island variety bringing 25 cents a pound and the more ordinary quality 12 cents. The value of the crop was $316,500, though the industry is but four years old. The crop of the present year is still better, and the Barbadoes shipments have brought 33 cents a pound. Applications for seed are being received from Cuba and the United States, in view of the superior quality of the West Indian cotton. It is said to excell our sea island variety.

Dried Milk.

Australia has adopted the system of drying milk, which is said to have been very successful in London, England. The milk is dried between steam rolls and sold as a powder, from which nothing but water has been extracted, and to which nothing but water requires to be added to make wholesome, clean and sterile milk. A leading medical officer is reported to have said that the adoption of dried milk at some of the asylums for consumptive patients and in general hospitals has proved a success.

Postman's Long Walk.

William Thomas, rural postman from Minsterley to Bog Mines, has just retired, after thirty-three years' continuous service. It is estimated that during his career he has walked a total distance of 165,000 miles, which is nearly seven times around the world. Thomas has his six good conduct stripes and is entitled to the imperial service medal.

The world's cocoa crop amounted to 146,552 tons in 1904, or 16 per cent over that of 1903, according to figures just published by the German Cocoa Trade Journal. The United States led the world in cocoa consumption, using 33,159 tons; Germany following with 27,101 tons, France with 21,799, the United Kingdom with 20,552 and the Netherlands with 21,124 tons. Switzerland, using 6,839 tons, leads the remaining countries. Italy consumed only 479 tons in 1904.

BABY'S AWFUL HUMOR.

Thin Skin Formed Over Body and Under It Was Watery Blood—Cured in One Week by Cuticura Remedies.

"When my little girl baby was one week old she had a skin disease. A thin skin formed over her body and under it was watery blood, and when she was washed it would burst and break. She was in that condition for weeks, and I tried everything I could think of, but nothing did her any good. When she was three months old I took her to San Antonio to see a doctor, but the doctor we wanted to see was not at home, so my sister gave me a cake of Cuticura Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment, and told me to use them, which I did in time. I used them three times, and the humor began to fade, and in one week she was sound and well, and it has never returned since. I think every mother should keep the Cuticura Remedies in the house. The Earl of Halsbury, who on the change of ministry resigned the chancellorship of England, retires at the advanced age of 80 years on a pension of $25,000 after he had received in sixteen years $1,000,000 in salary.

A Word for Canada.

In boasting of the commercial prosperity of the United States we are apt to overlook the great prosperity of Canada, as disclosed by its trade statistics. During the first seven months of the current fiscal year the aggregate of our exports and imports shows a total of $1,752,338,434. Estimating our population at 80,000,000, this indicates a per capita of $32 which is regarded as an index of great prosperity. But a similar calculation as to Canada will show a still greater degree of commercial and industrial thrift. The exports and imports of that country, with its population of 6,000,000, for the same period were $367,000,000, which is in the ratio of $51 per capita.

The Unabashed Horse.

The horse refuses to go, and his value has advanced. On January 1, 1897, there were 14,364,000 horses in this country. On the first day of 1906 there were 18,718,000. In nine years there has been an increase of 30 per cent. The gain in the number of mules has been great, but not so large. In 1897 there were 2,215,000. This year, notwithstanding the heavy purchases made by the British government during the Boer war, there are 3,400,000.

Forecasting Great Floods.

Early in 1897 telegrams were posted in a hundred cities along the Mississippi, warning the inhabitants to prepare for tremendous floods, writes John Elfreth Watkins in Technical World Magazine for May.

These warnings went so far as to name the exact days—sometimes two or three weeks off—when the coming flood would be at its height, and even stated the number of feet above low water mark which the water would reach. They were signed by the chief of the weather bureau at Washington.

The inhabitants of Cairo, of New Orleans and of the towns and cities between read these sensational messages, looked out at the shrunken Father of Waters flowing calmly along within his banks, and sniffed contemptuously. They were not going to be scared by a lot of fool scientists in Washington. Only a comparatively few timid people were at all alarmed or even impressed. These went so far as to move their valuable property up onto high ground, and were well laughed at for their pains. Even the newspapers took the matter up, and scolded the government for allowing the weather bureau to frighten needlessly a lot of silly old women.

Finally the date set for the coming of the flood arrived, and with it came the water. The greatest flood for more than half a century swept down the Mississippi and overflowed more than 13,000 square miles of land. The main streets of a hundred towns and cities were under water, and at some points practically the only property not damaged was that of the ridiculed people who had heeded the despised warning of the weather bureau. An it was estimated that property to the value of $15,000,000 was saved, which would certainly have been destroyed but for the advance notice which its owners had been wise enough to heed.

Pigeon Races With Train.

The passengers on the mail train from Moorehead City due here in the morning are greatly interested in the peculiar conduct of a pigeon, which is owned by a man in Wildwood, and engages the train in a race from Wildwood to Havelock every morning, a distance of fifteen miles.

The bird apparently watches for the approach of the train and flies along with it, sometimes ahead of it, but it never fails to accompany the train. It flies so near the cars that passengers can almost touch it.

When the train stops at Newport the bird perches near by and waits for it to start, then returns to its home, evidently with the impression on its little brain that it has discharged some duty.

The pigeon is handsome, being white with a black head. No other bird seems to take this freak, nor does this one attach itself to any other train, and the wonder grows how the bird appears to prefer this train to any other. It will be sadly missed when for any reason it discontinues its regular flights.

A West Virginian's Awful Distress Through Kidney Troubles.

W. L. Jackson, merchant, of Parkersburg, W. Va., says: "Driving about in bad weather brought kidney troubles on me, and I suffered twenty years with sharp, cramping pains in the back and urinary disorders. I often had to get up a dozen times at night to urinate. Retention set in, and I was obliged to use the catheter. I took to my bed, and the doctors failing to help, began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The urine soon came freely again, and the pain gradually disappeared. I have been cured eight years, and though over 70, am as active as a boy."

Chinese Fishing.

Very curious is the method of fishing followed by the Chinese in the Straits of Malacca. The fisherman lets down from the side of the boat a screen of white canvas stretched on wood. The shoal of fish mistake this for some floating obstruction and try to leap over it, with the result that the fish jump into the boat and are thus captured. This method is employed by Malays in their waters.

A WOMAN'S ORDEAL

DREADS DOCTOR'S QUESTIONS

Thousands Write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., and Receive Valuable Advice Absolutely Confidential and Free

There can be no more terrible ordeal to a delicate, sensitive, refined woman than to be obliged to answer certain questions in regard to her private ills, even when those questions are asked by her family physician, and many continue to suffer rather than submit to examinations which so many physicians propose in order to intelligently treat the disease; and this is the reason why so many physicians fail to cure female disease.

This is also the reason why thousands upon thousands of women are corresponding with Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. To her they can confide every detail of their illness, and from her great knowledge, obtained from years of experience in treating female ills, Mrs. Pinkham can advise sick women more wisely than the local physician.

Read how Mrs. Pinkham helped Mrs. T. C. Willadsen, of Manning, Ia. She writes: Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"I can truly say that you have saved my life, and I cannot express my gratitude in words. Before I wrote to you telling you how I felt, I had doctored for over two years steady, and spent lots of money in medicines besides, but it all failed to do me any good. I had female trouble and would daily have fainting spells, backache, bearing-down pains, and my monthly periods were very irregular and finally ceased. I wrote to you for your advice and received a letter full of instructions just what to do, and also commenced to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I have been restored to perfect health. Had it not been for you I would have been in my grave to-day."

Mountains of proof establish the fact that no medicine in the world equals Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for restoring women's health.

CATCHING KITES IN INDIA.

In India, where those large birds, the kites, are common and fearless, boys amuse themselves by catching them in a way that is almost ridiculous in its simplicity. A line is stretched tightly a little way above the ground between two posts. Beneath it is laid a bait. The kite stoops and seizes the bait, but when he rises from the earth hits the back of his neck against the string. This makes him throw up his wings, with the result that some of his quills get over the line, and he is kept a suspended and struggling captive until the boys run up and release him.

WHAT THEY SAY.

The American and the Englishman say: How do you do?

The German: How do you find yourself?

The Frenchman: How do you carry yourself?

The Italian: How do you stand?

The Spaniard: Go with God, Senor.

The Russian: How do you live on?

The Hollander: Have you had a good dinner?

The Chinese: Have you eaten your rice?

The Egyptian; How do your perspire?

The Mohammedan: Peace be with you.

The Persian: May thy shadow never grow less!

SKIMMING IT.

"If you are going to give a pan of milk don't skim it first," the old grandmother used to say; meaning, if you are going to do a favor, don't spoil it by an ungracious word or manner.

Haven't we noticed how much of this "skimming" goes on in ordinary family intercourse?

"Another errand? I never can go downtown without half a dozen commissions!" complains Rob, when his sister asks him to bring a book from the library. He never refuses to oblige her; he does not really count it an inconvenience; he only takes the cream off his kindness.

"Those gloves ripped again!" exclaims Mary, when John wants her to take a few stitches. "It seems to me they always need mending when I am in a hurry with something else." She would be shocked at his going shabby and distressed if any one thought her unwilling to render such office, but she makes it a little unpleasant to ask the favor.

The children follow the fashion. Tommy shuts the door at Bridget's request, but he grumbles at having to leave his top. Susie goes to the door when she is sent, but she departs with a protest that it is Tommy's turn. Thus all day long people who love one another skim the sweetness from every service they render.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

"CHERRY RIPE."

Children who are too little to play difficult games will enjoy "Cherry Ripe," says the Boston Herald.

For Cherry Ripe someone must be the old woman who sells the cherries and someone else the buyer. All the other little ones are ripe cherries.

They make a row of themselves in front of the old woman, and the buyer, coming up, parleys with her over a purchase.

"Old woman, old woman! What have you to-day?" she asks.

"I've sweet, ripe cherries. Will't please you to buy?" says the old woman. But the cautious buyer answers: "How do I know they are worth the cost? Before I spend for fruit I'll try."

She does this by walking along the row and taking a pretended bite from each cheek. Suddenly she kisses one of them, and then runs away as fast as she can, the kissed child following to catch her.

The position that is left empty in the row when the cherry runs out is immediately stepped into by the old woman. The buyer tries to get back to the old woman's place, and if she does it without being caught the cherry that chased her becomes buyer. Should the cherry succeed in capturing her, however, then the buyer remains buyer and the cherry becomes old woman for the next turn of the game.

THE HORSE AND THE DONKEY.

The ancestors of the horse were accustomed to roam over the plains, where every tuft of grass or bush might conceal an enemy waiting to spring upon them. Under these circumstances they must often have saved their lives by starting quickly back or jumping to one side when they came without warning upon some strange object. This is a habit which has not left the animal even after long years of domestication.

On the other hand, the donkey is descended from animals which lived among the hills, where there were precipices and dangerous declivities, and from these conditions resulted his slowness and sure footedness. His ancestors were not so liable to sudden attacks from wild beasts and snakes. Besides, sudden and wild starts would have been positively dangerous to them. Consequently they learned to avoid the very trick which has been so useful to the horse. The habit of eating thistles, which is peculiar alone to the donkey, is also descended from these ancestors. In the dry, barren localities which they inhabited there was often very little food; hence they learned to eat hard, dry and even prickly plants, when there was nothing else.

GIOTTO, THE GREAT PAINTER.

Over six hundred years ago there was, in a country place in Italy, a shepherd boy called Giotto. While his sheep were feeding he used to draw their pictures on rocks with a pointed stone, and though he was only ten years old, he drew so well that a great artist named Cimabue asked his father to let him go to the great city of Florence and learn from him to be a painter. Giotto's father consented, and the boy began to work in the studio of his new friend.

One day, when Cimabue was out, Giotto was overcome by a spirit of mischief. So he went to a portrait on which his master was spending his skill, and he painted a life-like fly right on his nose. When Cimabue returned he thought the fly was real, and tried to flick it away with his finger. Then he and everyone else laughed, and no one was cross with the boy, because so long as you work really hard a little fun is good. The foolish and wicked children are those who care for nothing but play, and who never work hard except when there is a lot to eat and only a little time to gobble it down.

One day, when Giotto was a man, some one came to see him. The caller was an agent of the Pope, who wished to have some paintings done by the best artists in Italy. He had, therefore, sent his servant to get examples of the work of all great painters, and when he saw them he was going to decide to whom he would give the honor of employment by himself. What Giotto's caller wanted was a drawing or painting by which his skill might be judged.

When he made his request Giotto took a piece of paper and made a circle on it with one twist of his wrist. Then he offered what he had done as a sample of his ability. The caller was angry and asked for a painting or drawing instead of a mere simple circle; but the artist said he could give him nothing else.

The Pope's agent, therefore, took it, and later submitted it to his master, who at once picked it out from the other work by different artists and asked what it meant. His servant told the story, and the Pope smiled and looked carefully at the plain circle. Then he said: "Let this artist be sent for; he has done a simple thing so perfectly that I am sure he is the very man to paint the pictures I have in mind." Giotto went to Rome and did some wonderful work that exists to this day.—Advance.

The Complex Life.

"Speaking of the woful waste of money, we wish to interrupt the meeting long enough to give a few figures on an important matter that seems to have been entirely overlooked," says Homer Hoch. "We refer to the four buttons on the sleeves of men's coats. Now, there are probably 600,000 men in Kansas, and they probably have on an average two coats apiece. That makes 1,200,000 coats and 4,800,000, or 400,000 dozens, sleeve buttons. The buttons cost about twenty cents a dozen, and at that rate the men of Kansas alone are carrying around on their coat sleeves in the form of buttons that have no use on earth or in the sky an investment of about $80,000. And the estimate is most conservative.

"Fellow countrymen, in the name of economy, and thrift, and philanthropy, and business sense, and all sorts of other things, is there no way to stop this reckless extravagance?"—Kansas City Journal.

FATAL BOMB MARS ALFONSO'S WEDDING

Misses King and Queen, But Decimates Royal Party.

SIXTEEN KILLED, MANY INJURED

Crown Coach Shattered by Missile, Which Fell Just in Front of It, But Royal Couple Are Unharmed --Thrown From a Balcony.

Madrid, Spain.—Alfonso and his bride had come for the altar and were receiving an ovation from their myriad of subjects such as even this proud capital had never seen before when suddenly they were brought face to face with the peril of assassination in its deadliest form.

Roses flung from every side were falling in a soft cascade upon the royal chariot. The young Queen, in unfeigned delight, was bowing right and left in acknowledgment of the deafening, unending chorus of welcome and congratulations, and the King, ignoring the multitude, was feasting his eyes upon the face of his bride, when a bunch of roses flung from a balcony fell with a rush as though made of lead in front of the chariot and just behind the mules drawing it.

There was a terrific crash and a little smoke rose in the air. Death and consternation in an instant supplanted the mirth and rejoicing. A score of men and women lay dead or mutilated. There was a moment of paralysis and horror. All eyes turned instinctively toward the bridal couple and saw their pale faces amid the ruins of their carriage gazing pitifully at the terrifying scene around them.

The first man to regain his self-possession was the Duke of Cornachuelos. He rushed forward, opened the door of the royal coach and fairly dragged the King and Queen to the ground. Others of the royal escort instantly surrounded them and they were led to another carriage.

Immediately before the outrage the Queen remarked to the King that she would be glad to reach home. The explosion followed her words.

Bleeding and wounded officers threw themselves around the royal carriage, and the Queen gazed with horror on the dead and dying. One officer lay dead with his hand raised in salute.

The young King speedily mastered his emotion and gave all his attention to his terrified bride. The line of march was quickly taken up to the palace, which was only a quarter of a mile away. Neither the King nor the Queen was hurt, although their escape seems little short of miraculous.

The bride made a brave effort to control her feelings, but the fearful transition from joy to horror was too much for human nerves to endure and presently she burst into tears. If the truth must be told, the King himself wept in sympathy.

Meantime at the scene of the outrage the first paralysis was succeeded by great confusion. The crowd, when it realized what had happened, became infuriated and surged towards the spot intent upon wreaking vengeance upon the author of the crime. Quickly a cordon of troops was formed, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the dead and injured were cared for and removed.

The following are the killed: Captain Barros, commanding part of the King's escort; Lieutenant Reysient, Lieutenant Prendergnst, the Marquise of Colosa and her daughter; Don Antonio Calvo and his niece, six years old; six soldiers, two citizens, one royal groom, who was leading a horse drawing the coach carrying the King and Queen. Two of the horses drawing the coach were killed.

The indignation of the people over the outrage was great. Some French detectives were almost lynched merely because they had a foreign appearance.

During the afternoon, following the tragedy, King Alfonso went with Queen Victoria to the Palace Chapel, where they offered up lengthy prayers.

POMP MARKS WEDDING.

Marriage of King and Princess a Gorgeous Spectacle.

The wedding and its tributary ceremonies of King Alfonso XIII. and Princess Ena of Battenberg, who chose the name of Victoria to please her subjects, were impressive as the Spanish spirit, rich in romance, could make them. Alfonso's Ministers had discounted the future as well as borrowed from the past to honor their young monarch and his northern bride. They marshaled the provinces of Spain in a bounteous pageant for a kaleidoscopic picture of the whole historic country with which to charm the eyes and ears of Princess Ena—Princess Victoria, the Spaniards already called her. Beautiful floats representative of the Kingdom's every part had been built and peopled to follow the bridal train. The ceremony itself not only was invested with the solemnity of the Roman ritual and honored by the presence of Toledo's Archbishop and the Pope's Special Nuncio, but an almost classic air was lent to it by the traditions of the Church of St. Jeronime el Real, wherein it was performed. And all Europe—all the world was represented in the sparkling thousands of guests that thronged the royal chapel.

Wedding weather greeted the King and Princess when they awoke, he in the Royal Palace, she in that of Prado.

Princess Ena, according to immemorial Spanish custom, donned her wedding finery at the Senate House, whence she was escorted from the villa of the Prado by half of the noble ladies of Spain, who superintended the adjusting of the wedding veil.

The royal progress to the church of King and bride was like a scene from the "Arabian Nights," fairy tale coaches made of crystal and gold, Arabian horses with tails and manes twined with roses, and harness plated with gold and studded with precious stones, troops in gorgeous uniforms, military bands, delegations from Aragon and Castile in the gay and picturesque native costumes, while everywhere were music and flowers, glitter and pomp.

Roars of welcome hailed Alfonso, followed by louder cheering when the bride's coach followed his. Roses were showered on them from balconies, hurled at them over the heads of the regiments strung along the sidewalks, tossed under the feet of the horses from roofs and upper windows. On all sides gleamed the rich colors of the country. The same patriotic idea was carried out in the interior decoration of the church, the blazing hues being heightened by thousands of incandescent lights and embroideries of gold and silver. On a dais were two gold armchairs, in one of which King Alfonso, arriving twenty minutes before his bride, sat impatiently, sending courtier after courtier to the entrance to watch for her until her coach rolled up to the door.

Conspicuous because of the simple dignity of their attire among the shining uniforms of Princes, Grand Dukes, Archdukes, nobles, marshals, admirals and generals were Minister Collier and Special Envoy Whitridge of the United States.

Two hundred choristers sang the processional as the royal couple advanced to the altar, King Alfonso flanked by Prince Carlos and his little namesake, Princess Ena escorted by her mother, her brother and her future mother-in-law.

The blonde bride in her wonderful robes of white and silver seemed a fitting figure in this fairy pageant wedding. Her gown was a gift from the King and cost $7000. It was of white brocade overlaid with silver embroidery and Spanish lace. The latter was valued at $50 a yard. The lace was caught up with posies of orange blossoms.

This wedding robe, while magnificent as a work of art, would shock a Parisian dressmaker by its elaboration. The bodice was high. Spain would be horrified to see any bride go to the altar decollete, as English princesses do.

Queen Victoria of Spain.

A coronet of brilliants sparkled beneath the wedding veil of old lace.

Alfonso, attired in the uniform of a captain general and wearing among his decorations the Order of the Golden Fleece and the English Order of the Garter, met his bride in front of the altar, and they stood together until the time came for them to kneel side by side on two cushions of softest silk lying on the dais. But before that solemn moment came the Northern Princess, her eyes smiling through tears, moved quickly down the steps to the dais and embraced her mother tenderly, returning to the King's side just as Cardinal Sancha began the wedding service.

The ceremony, which lasted nearly an hour, terminated with the nuncio pronouncing the Pope's benediction on the newly married couple and the chanting of the Te Deum. Following this all Madrid broke into frantic demonstrations of joy, while cannon boomed and church bells chimed.

As the ceremony closed King Alfonso embraced his bride and her mother. This glimpse of domestic tenderness, as well as the democratic touch given by the presence of many poor people in the galleries, who were there by the King's request, made the scene an effective one, to which a melancholy sequel quickly succeeded.

Wedding Cost $10,000,000.

London.—A correspondent at Madrid makes a calculation of the cost of the wedding and arrives roughly at a total expenditure of $10,000,000. He puts the outlay for decorations by the municipality and private citizens at $125,000.

Having regard for the necessity of every woman invited to the wedding ceremony and the various festivities equipping herself with an elaborate new robe, ornaments and in many cases jewels, he believes that not less than $3,500,000 was paid to milliners, dressmakers and jewelers.

The restoration of the royal state coaches, new harness and trappings cost more than $150,000. More than $1,250,000 was expended in preparing and redecorating the Prado Palace, including the building of new kitchens, in furnishing the Chateau of La Granja for the honeymoon and in restoring the apartments in the palace at Madrid for the new Queen.

New uniforms for the troops and court servants cost $150,000. In addition to all these there is the outlay for the bullfight, a military review, and the various fetes, which it is known will amount to many thousands of dollars.

British Observe the Day.

Dover, England.—A salute of twenty-one guns in honor of the royal wedding at Madrid was fired by the warships of the Channel Squadron in this harbor. The battleships at Sheerness and elsewhere were dressed in rainbow fashion, with the Spanish ensign at the mainmast. All fired royal salutes at noon.

CONGRESSMAN KILLS HIMSELF.

Robert Adams, of Pennsylvania, a Suicide in Washington.

Washington, D. C.—Representative Robert Adams, a member of Congress from the Second District of Pennsylvania, comprising a part of the city of Philadelphia, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head with a pistol at his apartments in the Metropolitan Club chambers. The shooting occurred shortly after 7 o'clock a. m., and Mr. Adams died at 11.30 at the Emergency Hospital, where he was taken half an hour after he had fired the shot. He was unconscious when found and did not rally.

Financial reverses and the prospect of failure to be returned to his seat in Congress are believed to have been the cause of the suicide. Mr. Adams was a bachelor, fifty-seven years old.

3 CHILDREN DEAD IN A TRUNK.

They Had Been Missing Four Hours, When Mother Found Them.

Kankakee, Ill.—Three girls, aged eight, six and two years, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Adelord Vanslette, were found smothered to death, seated upright in a trunk. They had been missing for four hours.

The circumstances of the deaths are mysterious. Search had been made everywhere, according to the mother's story, when at 9 o'clock p. m. the mother found the three children seated upright dead in an old trunk.

Apparently they had made no struggle or effort to release themselves. The mother thinks the children crawled into the trunk while playing and that the trunk accidentally locked itself.

PENNSYLVANIA BOLTERS.

L. Emery and R. Blankenburg Lead the Anti-Machine Ticket.

Philadelphia.—The State Convention of the Lincoln party (anti-machine Republicans) which numbered 278 delegates, representing every county in the State, nominated the following ticket: Governor, Louis Emery, Jr., McKean County; Lieutenant-Governor, Rudolph Blankenburg, Philadelphia; Auditor-General, Major George W. Merrick, Tioga County; Secretary of Internal Affairs, Elisha A. Coray, Luzerne County.

FATAL "JAG" ON SHELLAC.

Convicts in Blind Convulsions on Wood Alcohol Varnish.

Rawlins, Wyoming.—William Wardlow and Jesse Keating, convicts, died at the State penitentiary from drinking wood alcohol out of a bottle of shellac varnish in the broom factory. They allowed the shellac to settle and drank the alcohol off the top. Both died in horrible convulsions, having become totally blind. At death the entire surface of the body was black as shoe leather.

SMOOT TO LOSE SEAT.

Senate Committee Against Him by a Vote of Seven to Five.

Washington, D. C.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, by a vote of seven to five, adopted the following resolution submitted by Senator Dubois, of Idaho?

"Resolved, That Reed Smoot is not entitled to his seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah."

John D. Rockefeller Sails.

FATAL BOMB MARS ALFONSO'S WEDDING

Misses King and Queen, But Decimates Royal Party.

SIXTEEN KILLED, MANY INJURED

Crown Coach Shattered by Missile, Which Fell Just in Front of It, But Royal Couple Are Unharmed --Thrown From a Balcony.

Madrid, Spain.—Alfonso and his bride had come for the altar and were receiving an ovation from their myriad of subjects such as even this proud capital had never seen before when suddenly they were brought face to face with the peril of assassination in its deadliest form.

Roses flung from every side were falling in a soft cascade upon the royal chariot. The young Queen, in unfeigned delight, was bowing right and left in acknowledgment of the deafening, unending chorus of welcome and congratulations, and the King, ignoring the multitude, was feasting his eyes upon the face of his bride, when a bunch of roses flung from a balcony fell with a rush as though made of lead in front of the chariot and just behind the mules drawing it.

There was a terrific crash and a little smoke rose in the air. Death and consternation in an instant supplanted the mirth and rejoicing. A score of men and women lay dead or mutilated.

There was a moment of paralysis and horror. All eyes turned instinctively toward the bridal couple and saw their pale faces amid the ruins of their carriage gazing pitifully at the terrifying scene around them.

The first man to regain his self-possession was the Duke of Cornachuelos. He rushed forward, opened the door of the royal coach and fairly dragged the King and Queen to the ground. Others of the royal escort instantly surrounded them and they were led to another carriage.

Immediately before the outrage the Queen remarked to the King that she would be glad to reach home. The explosion followed her words.

Bleeding and wounded officers threw themselves around the royal carriage, and the Queen gazed with horror on the dead and dying. One officer lay dead with his hand raised in salute.

The young King speedily mastered his emotion and gave all his attention to his terrified bride. The line of march was quickly taken up to the palace, which was only a quarter of a mile away. Neither the King nor the Queen was hurt, although their escape seems little short of miraculous.

The bride made a brave effort to control her feelings, but the fearful transition from joy to horror was too much for human nerves to endure and presently she burst into tears. If the truth must be told, the King himself wept in sympathy.

Meantime at the scene of the outrage the first paralysis was succeeded by great confusion. The crowd, when it realized what had happened, became infuriated and surged towards the spot intent upon wreaking vengeance upon the author of the crime. Quickly a cordon of troops was formed, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the dead and injured were cared for and removed.

The following are the killed: Captain Barros, commanding part of the King's escort; Lieutenant Reysient, Lieutenant Prendergast, the Marquise of Colosa and her daughter; Don Antonio Calvo and his niece, six years old; six soldiers, two citizens, one royal groom, who was leading a horse drawing the coach carrying the King and Queen. Two of the horses drawing the coach were killed.

The indignation of the people over the outrage was great. Some French detectives were almost lynched merely because they had a foreign appearance.

During the afternoon, following the tragedy, King Alfonso went with Queen Victoria to the Palace Chapel, where they offered up lengthy prayers.

POMP MARKS WEDDING.

Marriage of King and Princess a Gorgeous Spectacle.

The wedding and its tributary ceremonies of King Alfonso XIII. and Princess Ena of Battenberg, who chose the name of Victoria to please her subjects, were impressive as the Spanish spirit, rich in romance, could make them. Alfonso's Ministers had discounted the future as well as borrowed from the past to honor their young monarch and his northern bride. They marshaled the provinces of Spain in a bounteous pageant for a kaleidoscopic picture of the whole historic country with which to charm the eyes and ears of Princess Ena—Princess Victoria, the Spaniards already called her. Beautiful floats representative of the Kingdom's every part had been built and peopled to follow the bridal train. The ceremony itself not only was invested with the solemnity of the Roman ritual and honored by the presence of Toledo's Archbishop and the Pope's Special Nuncio, but an almost classic air was lent to it by the traditions of the Church of St. Jeronime el Real, wherein it was performed. And all Europe—all the world was represented in the sparkling thousands of guests that thronged the royal chapel.

Wedding weather greeted the King and Princess when they awoke, he in the Royal Palace, she in that of Prado.

Princess Ena, according to immemorial Spanish custom, donned her wedding finery at the Senate House, whence she was escorted from the villa of the Prado by half of the noble ladies of Spain, who superintended the adjusting of the wedding veil.

The royal progress to the church of King and bride was like a scene from the "Arabian Nights," fairy tale coaches made of crystal and gold, Arabian horses with tails and manes twined with roses, and harness plated with gold and studded with precious stones, troops in gorgeous uniforms, military bands, delegations from Aragon and Castile in the gay and picturesque native costumes, while everywhere were music and flowers, glitter and pomp.

Roars of welcome hailed Alfonso, followed by louder cheering when the bride's coach followed his. Roses were showered on them from balconies, hurled at them over the heads of the regiments strung along the sidewalks, tossed under the feet of the horses from roofs and upper windows. On all sides gleamed the rich colors of the country. The same patriotic idea was carried out in the interior decoration of the church, the blazing hues being heightened by thousands of incandescent lights and embroideries of gold and silver. On a dais were two gold armchairs, in one of which King Alfonso, arriving twenty minutes before his bride, sat impatiently, sending courtier after courtier to the entrance to watch for her until her coach rolled up to the door.

Conspicuous because of the simple dignity of their attire among the shining uniforms of Princes, Grand Dukes, Archdukes, nobles, marshals, admirals and generals were Minister Collier and Special Envoy Whitridge of the United States.

Two hundred choristers sang the processional as the royal couple advanced to the altar, King Alfonso flanked by Prince Carlos and his little namesake, Princess Ena escorted by her mother, her brother and her future mother-in-law.

The blonde bride in her wonderful robes of white and silver seemed a fitting figure in this fairy pageant wedding. Her gown was a gift from the King and cost $7000. It was of white brocade overlaid with silver embroidery and Spanish lace. The lace was caught up with posies of orange blossoms.

This wedding robe, while magnificent as a work of art, would shock a Parisian dressmaker by its elaboration. The bodice was high. Spain would be horrified to see any bride go to the altar decollete, as English princesses do.

Queen Victoria of Spain.

A coronet of brilliants sparkled beneath the wedding veil of old lace.

Alfonso, attired in the uniform of a captain general and wearing among his decorations the Order of the Golden Fleece and the English Order of the Garter, met his bride in front of the altar, and they stood together until the time came for them to kneel side by side on two cushions of softest silk lying on the dais. But before that solemn moment came the Northern Princess, her eyes smiling through tears, moved quickly down the steps to the dais and embraced her mother tenderly, returning to the King's side just as Cardinal Sancha began the wedding service.

The ceremony, which lasted nearly an hour, terminated with the nuncio pronouncing the Pope's benediction on the newly married couple and the chanting of the Te Deum. Following this all Madrid broke into frantic demonstrations of joy, while cannon boomed and church bells chimed.

As the ceremony closed King Alfonso embraced his bride and her mother. This glimpse of domestic tenderness, as well as the democratic touch given by the presence of many poor people in the galleries, who were there by the King's request, made the scene an effective one, to which a melancholy sequel quickly succeeded.

Wedding Cost $10,000,000.

London.—A correspondent at Madrid makes a calculation of the cost of the wedding and arrives roughly at a total expenditure of $10,000,000. He puts the outlay for decorations by the municipality and private citizens at $125,000.

Having regard for the necessity of every woman invited to the wedding ceremony and the various festivities equipping herself with an elaborate new robe, ornaments and in many cases jewels, he believes that not less than $3,500,000 was paid to milliners, dressmakers and jewelers.

The restoration of the royal state coaches, new harness and trappings cost more than $150,000. More than $1,250,000 was expended in preparing and redecorating the Prado Palace, including the building of new kitchens, in furnishing the Chateau of La Granja for the honeymoon and in restoring the apartments in the palace at Madrid for the new Queen.

New uniforms for the troops and court servants cost $150,000. In addition to all these there is the outlay for the bullfight, a military review, and the various fetes, which it is known will amount to many thousands of dollars.

British Observe the Day.

Dover, England.—A salute of twenty-one guns in honor of the royal wedding at Madrid was fired by the warships of the Channel Squadron in this harbor. The battleships at Sheerness and elsewhere were dressed in rainbow fashion, with the Spanish ensign at the mainmast. All fired royal salutes at noon.

CONGRESSMAN KILLS HIMSELF.

Robert Adams, of Pennsylvania, a Suicide in Washington.

Washington, D. C.—Representative Robert Adams, a member of Congress from the Second District of Pennsylvania, comprising a part of the city of Philadelphia, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head with a pistol at his apartments in the Metropolitan Club chambers. The shooting occurred shortly after 7 o'clock a. m., and Mr. Adams died at 11.30 at the Emergency Hospital, where he was taken half an hour after he had fired the shot. He was unconscious when found and did not rally.

Financial reverses and the prospect of failure to be returned to his seat in Congress are believed to have been the cause of the suicide. Mr. Adams was a bachelor, fifty-seven years old.

3 CHILDREN DEAD IN A TRUNK.

They Had Been Missing Four Hours, When Mother Found Them.

Kankakee, Ill.—Three girls, aged eight, six and two years, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Adelord Vanalette, were found smothered to death, seated upright in a trunk. They had been missing for four hours.

The circumstances of the deaths are mysterious. Search had been made everywhere, according to the mother's story, when at 9 o'clock p. m. the mother found the three children seated upright dead in an old trunk.

Apparently they had made no struggle or effort to release themselves. The mother thinks the children crawled into the trunk while playing and that the trunk accidentally locked itself.

They allowed the shellac to settle and drank the alcohol off the top. Both died in horrible convulsions, having become totally blind. At death the entire surface of the body was black as shoe leather.

BEAT NINE.

John Anderson: The N

THE TACTLESS HOSTESS.

The meat pies made by Jarley's wife
Are famed throughout the town;
They'd raise a mortal to the skies,
Or draw an angel down.

But Jarley's spouse, though skillful cook,
Fails woefully in tact;
And I, who pose as raconteur,
Have learned that painful fact.

How oft a climax I have reached
In story choice and new,
When, fork up-poised, she has implored,
"Another helping? Do!"

Or when the guests, with eager ears,
Some jest's keen point await,
She'll pout, "A wee bit? I insist!
My dear, just pass his plate!"

Now, I'm a law-abiding man;
And Jarley's of my kin;
But I confess it fires my blood
When Jarley's wife butts in!

And if, some day, this artist-cook
In weltering gore's described,
The verdict must be "Self Defense"
Or "Murder Justified!"

Lost Bees and Trousers.

A German beekeeper undertook to carry some of his choicest bees to a bee show. He took a train in Hesse with his bees in a basket at his feet. The bees escaped from the basket, crawled up his trouser's legs. His actions soon aroused suspicions in the hearts of two women who occupied the same compartment with him. They pulled the bell cord and stopped the train. When the bee fancier explained the situation he was placed in an empty compartment to have it out with the bees all by himself. Here he removed his trousers and began shaking them out of the window to free them of the swarm. Unfortunately they caught a telegraph pole and were swept away, bees, money and all. At the next station the irate station master brought forth the reluctant bee fancier in a rug and he pawned his watch to acquire decent raiment to walk back along the line in search of his bees and his trousers.

Free Lunch Schemer.

An Irishman, who was notoriously impecunious, has discovered a new way to achieve some of the luxuries of life. This is how he explains it: "Whist, man, don't say a word about it. I found everybody wanted to sell me 'auto' for a good price to some one at every hotel I stopped at and prospected to be as green as the Emerald Isle and gave out that I wanted a second hand machine, and would not go to any dealer as I did not know enough about a machine, and he might cheat me. I have had forty-nine rides, fifteen luncheons, five dinners and forty cigars, good, bad and indifferent, but divil a machine have I bought yet."

Direct armies by consummate art,
Cause rise and fall of empires chart—
With Jones' luck.

If I, he said, have the power I crave,
If I, he said, could harness wind and wave
And make the elements my slave—
With Jones' luck.

In fact, the theory is sound,
Not Love nor Science will be found
The force that makes the world go round—
It's Jones' luck.

A KNIGHT OF HERE-AND-NOW

By ELLA S. WATSON.

THE teacher had just got to the breathing part of the story when the schoolhouse clock stood at 3:30 and Ralph slipped from the room. He listened, though, for one more sentence as he buckled on his paper bag in the entry.

"There be woeful dangers in the woods,' said the knight, 'and through the wood there be four-score paths. One is the Path of Exact-Right. The stones are sharp, and the way is steep at the outset. The plain paths are many: Just-as-Good Road, What's-the-Harm Walk, Almost-Right Course, Everybody-Does-It, Highway, and many more.

"'But which shall I take?' asked the boy, impatiently. The knight smiled wistfully. 'I may not tell you. Only this may I say: The thorns that tangle the Path of Exact-Right bear one white rose. If one go by that path, he may pluck the rose and wear it beneath his breastplate, and its perfume will give joy, and the joy will be the most when the thorns tear most sorely.'"

"Zoo-o-o-h!" sounded the shrill traction car's whistle, and Ralph had to dash to the "stop" to catch the bundle of dailies as the conductor tossed it out.

That night Ralph's mother was resting after a hard day at the wash-tub, but she was not too tired to see that Ralph was a little glum.

"Whatever's doing at school the last half an hour I miss, and that's always the nicest part of the day!"

Mrs. Breen laid a water-creased hand for an instant on the little walnut-stained fist. "Mamma's brave helper boy," she said, tenderly.

She had never read many books, but from all language her mother-wisdom had unconsciously selected the only words that could overcome the boy's mood.

"Teacher was reading another of those Here-and-Now-Knight stories, and he told the story as far as he had heard it.

"It's so provoking not to know how it came out," he added, ruefully.

"The boy took the thorn path," said Ralph's mother.

"How d'you know? Did you ever read it?"

"No, but I know! He wouldn't mind the thorns; he would want the white rose."

Ralph swung along the streets of the little country village, delivering his papers, and then stood on the corner to sell his extra copies.

"Papers! P-a-pers! C'lumbus evening papers!"

"Here, boy!"

Ralph darted across the street. Bigger people than he moved fast when Mr. Ferdinand Rochet spoke.

Mr. Ferdinand Rochet was the president of the new milk condenser concern. It was fit and proper that everyone show great deference to Mr. Ferdinand Rochet. More than that, the great rush at the factory was at morning and night, when the milk came in. If Ralph could get work there, as others did, just for those hours, he could earn money so mamma wouldn't have to take in washing; he wouldn't have to leave school, either. And mamma must give up washing; the doctor had told her so.

A fellow can think of a good many things while he is crossing the road.

"Give me a Scrambler," ordered the great man. "Give me all the Scramblers you have; and see here, boy, you can bring fifty copies down to the office every night till election."

Ralph's head whirled. Fifty copies! Earn as much extra in two nights as mother made by a whole day's washing! But—

"I'm sorry." (Oh, could anyone guess how sorry?) "I'm sorry, but I don't sell the Scrambler."

"No?" queried Mr. Rochet, in surprise. "Well, don't forget to order it sent to-morrow."

Ralph was usually speechless from bashfulness in the presence of grown-ups, and big people were bashful when Mr. Ferdinand Rochet fastened his keen eyes on them, but Ralph faced the sharp look without a quiver, and said, simply, "I don't sell the Scrambler, and I'm never going to."

As it was, he scurried back to his own corner, and tried to look as if he didn't care, but he couldn't call papers while they stood there, Mr. Rochet and Dorothy.

They were waiting for the car. As usual, it was late. Mr. Rochet took out a memorandum book and began to figure. Dorothy slipped across to Ralph's corner.

"Why don't you carry the Scrambler?" she asked.

"It prints saloon advertisements, and it tells folks to vote for saloon people, and, and"—he broke off miserably, remembering that her father had desired the paper.

"Papa says he'll get a paper route started for Harley Griffith. He'll carry the Scrambler. Would that drive you out of business?"

Ralph nodded and turned his back. Dorothy understood. She had seen the tears coming.

Ralph mechanically counted out change to such buyers as asked for a paper, but his head reeled and his mind was in confusion. "If the paper has to be sold here, anyhow, I might as well do it as anybody. Harley don't need the money. I was going to get the washing machine and new clothes and wall paper—and the baby's picture taken. Fear he'd die, and us not have any!"

A dozen times he half started to the other corner to say he had changed his mind, but as many times he paused.

"All I could do wouldn't help temperance any," he argued. He was only a boy, but he knew something of the power of the saloon. His own father had lost his place because of his work for temperance, and in hunting through one city after another, forced at last to walk, the exposure brought on a fatal pneumonia.

"It's no use to fight the saloon; it's too big," he said. Then he clenched his fist and said, "My father died rather than give up, and I guess his boy won't be a quitter!"

The Clarion, the paper Ralph carried, had the following statement two days later: "Mr. F. N. Rochet, the Scrambler's candidate for Congress, has withdrawn from the race. He practically admits that he wasn't equal to the dirty work required by his backers."

But the announcement, startling as it was to political circles, made no impression on Ralph. What did reach his attention was a note from his teacher. "Dear Ralph," it read, "my uncle, Mr. Rochet, and Dorothy have been telling me something of you, and putting it with some things I know, I have drawn my own conclusions. My uncle is writing you a business proposition, which, I think, you will do well to accept. Never drop the white rose."—Sunday-School Herald.

Making Doll Houses.

In nearly all the advanced schools other than strictly public ones the manual training begins with dolls and dolls' houses. In a large private school in New York an expert Sloyd instructor, a Swedish woman, of university training, is paid a large salary to supervise the construction of a wonderful dolls' house, which is being built by a class of little girls and boys, says the New York Post. The children built the house, designed and made the wall paper, and put it on the walls. They are making the furniture, piece by piece, including curtains, pictures, bed linen and draperies, and will eventually make, if not the dolls, at least all their clothes. Boys and girls work together, and do pretty much the same kind of work. No distinction is made between masculine and feminine tasks. Such a dolls' house, made in the Normal School, at New Platz, N. Y., was exhibited in the Educational Building at the St. Louis Exposition, and attracted a great deal of attention. There is no reason why similar houses should not be made at home, and it ought to be worth any mother's while to devote a little intelligent study to this form of manual training.

The Coming Smokeless City.

Smoke Inspector Krause's dream of a time when there will be practically no smoke is not unlikely to be fulfilled. Many things are pointing that way.

Smoke is caused by imperfect combustion. All of it is waste, and the elimination of waste is one of the chief aims of every business and manufacturing concern. Smoke-preventing devices are being improved, and it is reasonable to assume that they will yet meet all requirements.

Another force antagonistic to smoke is electricity. Its use in the form of power transmitted by wire from big generating stations is becoming more common every day. The same principle is being applied to the heating of buildings in the cities. The number of chimneys is becoming proportionately less and the smoke from them is diminishing. The decrease in their relative number enables the smoke inspectors to perform their duties more thoroughly.

In view of the progress that is being made, "smokeless Cleveland," at least, is more than a dream. It is a strong probability.—Cleveland Leader.

Snake in Cyclone Cellar.

If there is any place where a Western man wants to feel free from intrusion, it is in his cyclone cellar. The Kansas City Journal relates how the family of John Moore, in Northern Comanche County, went to their place of refuge from a tornado the other night only to find they had got into a cave barefooted with a rattlesnake. The inferior of the cave was in complete darkness when the inmates were startled by hearing the unmistakable sound made by a rattler. Mr. Moore hastily struck a match and by its faint glimmer saw the snake in the attitude of striking. The match went out and the family began to scream. Another match was lighted, and the snake was still visible, and rattling furiously. Then Mr. Moore made a flying leap for the steps, jumping over the snake, opened the door, and secured a pitchfork. Then, while his wife held a match he killed the rattler.

Tiniest of Sleigh Bells.

The smallest of bells of the sleigh bell type is made of gold and designed to be attached to the collar of a cat or tied by a silken cord around the neck of a kitten. It is scarcely bigger than a large pea, but is of perfect sleigh bell style in every detail. These tiny sleigh bells for cats or kittens cost $5.

NEW USES FOR GRANITE ROCK

TESTING ITS VALUE AS A FERTILIZER WHEN GROUND FINE.

The Department of Agriculture Making Experiments Which Give Promise of Valuable Results—If Successful the Price of a Common Farming Requisite Will Be Cheaper.

Germany, which has long had a monopoly in furnishing carbonate of potash fertilizer to the farmers of this country, will hereafter, be compelled to seek other markets for that product, if some experiments which are now being conducted by the Department of Agriculture are so successful as officials think they will be, says the Washington correspondent of the New York Mail.

These experiments promise to furnish a new fertilizer to consumers in the United States at a price much lower than has heretofore prevailed. They are of immense importance to agricultural interests, and especially to tobacco growers of Texas.

Oddly enough, the movement has its genesis in the bureau of roads, which ordinarily has nothing to do with such subjects as fertilizers. Last summer, when Dr. Cushman, of the roads office, was testing some granite rock material he was working in the labatory with very finely powdered rock.

The idea struck him, as it has struck a good many other chemists, that it was a shame that this country, with an unlimited supply of rock high in its percentage of potash, should have to depend on other countries for its potash salts. No commercial deposits of the salts have ever been found in this country, as in Germany.

He extracted some of the potash by electricity, then decided that as ground rock was very cheap it might be worth while to try the experiment of letting the plants do their own extracting.

He made tests on his own place and found that the powdered rock did actually act as a fertilizer, though the potash it carried was so tied up that it took the chemistry of nature to extract it and feed it into the plant. But the first trial promised well.

The work was then turned over to the bureau of plant industry, and three plots of tobacco were planted in the greenhouse. One of these was treated with the German fertilizer, another was left without any fertilizer and the third was fertilized with finely ground granite. The granite was high in potash, but it had not been treated in any way, and if the experiment succeeded it simply meant that there was a big new field of home-grown fertilizer open to the farmer.

Recently the crops of tobacco were cut. The imported fertilizer had produced a crop green that weighed 155 pounds. The powdered rock produced a crop of 154 pounds and the unfertilized crop was spotted and ran about 120 pounds or a little under.

The crop was examined by experts, and, so far as could be told the leaf was not only just as heavy, but of just as good texture in the rock fertilized patch as in that on which the imported fertilizer had been used. The crop is being dried now, and it will take a long time before it is all properly cured, so that it can be made up for smoking and finally tested.

But that was a greenhouse experiment, and greenhouse work to field work is about like laboratory experiments to commercial work. What succeeds under glass may or may not be a success out of doors. But the department was so well pleased with the results that it has tried the new fertilizer on crops of tobacco in Connecticut, Virginia, Kentucy and Florida.

These crops are now just getting under way, and a great deal of interest is felt in the success of the work out of doors. The principal question seems to be whether there will be enough water in the natural rainfall to make the potash in the ground rock available for the plants.

During anything like a fairly wet season there is little question that there would be water in plenty. But it is possible that for a very dry crop there will have to be as much as a tenth of imported fertilizer added to the native rock.

The commercial value of the work is in the fact that the imported fertilizer costs in this country about $100 a ton. The ground rock, on the other hand, can be produced for about $3 a ton, and there is so much of it in the country that runs high in potash and is available for the use that the supply could never be cornered.

MURDERERS IN FRANCE.

Some Curious Phases of Law in Different Countries.

The recent murder of Senor Balmaceda, Secretary to the Chilean Legation in Brussels, by Luiz Waddington, son of the Chilean Minister, again directs attention to one of the many laws that are sadly in need of alteration.

It will be remembered that Waddington after firing five shots at his sister's betrothed, ran at full speed to the Chilean Legation, which stands close to Senor Balmaceda's house, and took refuge there. In consequence of this action the police have no power to enter the building and arrest the murderer, for the legation is considered to be foreign territory and therefore inviolable. The murderer is thus able for the time to snap his fingers at the law and the police.

Even had the crime been comitted in this country, says Pearson's Weekly of London, our authorities would have been just as helpless, for, as the law runs, the official residences of the representatives of foreign countries are exempt from the jurisdiction of the country in which they stand, and local authorities have no right to enter them under any circumstances.

Once a murderer is captured in this country he may be tried for his crime, no matter how long he has escaped the arm of justice; but in France this is not so. There if a murderer is not discovered and brought to trial within fifteen years he may go free as the most crimeless citizen. Only the other day a man who had committed a murder twenty-five years ago wrote defiantly to the police confessing the crime and giving his address in Paris. Investigation proved his story to be true, yet the police were prevented by the law from arresting and punishing him.

The man who fails to raise his hat when a funeral is passing becomes liable by an old law in Chester to be taken before a magistrate and imprisoned.

A stupid law in France is that a husband cannot charge his wife with any criminal offence. A dramatic incident recently exposed the opportunities the law provides to the criminally intent.

A. M. Binet a few months back became so infatuated with a young woman whom he met by chance that he begged her to marry him. On the day of the ceremony the delighted bridegroom gave a dinner in a well known Paris restaurant. After the dinner came the ball, and then M. Binet took home his bride.

No sooner had they entered the house, however, than she removed her white veil and orange blossoms, and, suddenly becoming deathly pale, gasped: "A doctor; a doctor!" In less than a quarter of an hour a doctor returned in a cab with the horrified bridegroom. Judge of their surprise when the two men discovered that the bride had disappeared—taking away with her a sum of $4,000 which M. Binet kept in an escritoire. On rushing immediately to the local police magistrate he received the cold comfort that as he had married the lady he could not, according to the law, take any proceedings against her.

WORK FOR ARMY OFFICERS.

Colleges Where They Learn to Make Trenches and Suspension Bridges.

Persons who think officers of the Regular army have nothing to do but sit around their clubs attired in their nattiest uniforms enjoying life would doubtless be surprised to see them minus blouses and starched collars swinging axes, hewing timber for trestle bridges, digging trenches with pick and shovel, carrying sod for fascine revertments and making palisades in time of peace.

There are three colleges at Fort Leavenworth for the instruction of army officers in the art of war—the infantry and cavalry school, the signal school and the staff college. All are under the supervision of Brig.-General J. Franklin Bell, aided by a body of officers, designated as a personal staff.

One interesting feature of the college course is the engineering department, where the student officers have to do real work and have no enlisted men to aid them in any manner. In this they are called upon to construct lying, kneeling and standing trenches, palisades, fascine and gabions, revertments or sandbags and loopholes of sod on parapet, wire entanglements, bridges with framed trestles on land and water, trestle bridges of round timbers, bridges of canvas pontoons, barrel and log rafts, double lock spar bridges with trestle approaches, bridges with wooden pontoons and with pile trestles and a flying bridge.

The suspension bridge is 100 feet long, between two supporting towers. Two of the bridges, with reserve equipage wooden pontoons, are each twelve bays and 240 feet long. Each bridge is tested by driving a loaded army wagon across it. The flying bridge, to carry troops across streams too wide to be bridged, was constructed on the Missouri River. It is made by sinking a large stone, to which a cable is attached. Pontoons, either two or three, or long rafts are attached to the cable, and the current is made to force the raft across the stream by means of a rudder placed at a certain angle.

The officers are taken to different parts of the big reservation, and in charge of their instructors build trenches and bridges, the majority of which are left standing. They have been viewed by high army officers and pronounced perfect in every detail.—Leavenworth correspondence Dayton Daily News.

Hot Times in India.

Karachi, a port in northern India, has a most unpleasant climate. The parched desert country behind Karachi has a terrific heat. Jocobad, thirty miles away, often records 125 degree Fahrenheit. The one mail train a day carries a coffin in the hot weather season "for the use of passengers." If need be, and in one year long ago twenty-three European engine drivers died while working their trains. A long journey by train in the hot season is particularly exhausting. Carriage windows are kept shut to exclude the heat, and sometimes not only does the woodwork get hot to the touch but even the water carried in the tanks on the roof can scarcely be endured with the hand.—London Tatler.

"YOUNG JOE IS O. K."

President Roosevelt has appointed J. F. Dimmick postmaster at Montgomery and he was promptly confirmed by the senate. Though the appointment was a surprise to the majority of the republicans, yet all approve, and we heartily congratulate "Young Joe." The following article from the Montgomery Times voices the general sentiment:

"'Young Joe' Dimmick, as he is well and favorably known in Montgomery, and who is to be Montgomery's postmaster for the next four years, is the son of Capt. J. W. Dimmick, clerk of the United States court in Montgomery for more than a third of a century, and the latter has thoroughly identified himself with the progressive development of Montgomery.

"Joseph F. Dimmick, the appointee, is a quiet, scholarly gentleman and a native of Montgomery, of which fact he is modestly proud. He is a graduate with honors from Harvard university, but has always preferred to work out his life mission in his native state, Alabama. For several years he has been the chief clerk in his father's office and has displayed rare executive ability in that capacity, thus relieving his busy father from many cares.

"Of course, Mr. Dimmick's appointment is a great surprise to everybody here, as he has never even been mentioned in connection with this office But all feel confident that, though lightning has struck him, he will all the same make a first class postmaster.

"This appointment seems to be a case of 'greatness thrust upon' a man. But Young Joe is O. K."

SMITH AND MIDDLETON WIN IN SUPREME COURT.

Tuesday the supreme court of Alabama decided a case of considerable interest to the people of Chilton county. At the fall term of our circuit court in 1905, "Be it remembered that Judge A. H. Alston was presiding," the Southern railway filed application with the court for a peremptory "writ of mandamus" to compel the court of county commissioners to pass upon a claim which the railroad said was filed with said court. The court of commissioners, by their attorneys, Messrs. Smith and Middleton, demurred to the petition filed by the railroad on the ground that said petition and the claim on which it was based were improperly verified. Judge Alston overruled the demurrers and granted the writ of mandamus and then Smith and Middleton appealed the case to the supreme court and the decision handed down Tuesday sustains these attorneys in every particular, holding that Judge Alston erred in granting the writ asked for by the railroad. Considerable distinction attach to Messrs. Smith and Middleton by virtue of this victory and THE UNION extends to them hearty congratulations for the skilful manner in which they have guarded the county's interests.

FONVILLE'S TIMELY WORDS.

Editor Union: This announcement of Brother Adams for commissioner of agriculture, etc., gets me. I'm afraid he's a little premature. A few years ago, when some of our "returned prodigals" were entering the democratic county primary for various little offices, I cautioned against it on the ground of if they had no respect for themselves they could not in reason ask the democrats to respect them.

My advice coming to the ears of a discreet democrat, he remarked, "Let the damned rascals run. We'll see to it that they get nothing."

And it turned out just that way. I only tell this as a sort of "verbum sat" to any d— r— who has in view honors from men who despise him.

The more I think of it, I'm confirmed in the conclusion that the prodigal is a very despicable fellow. People who read the Bible story must not forget that the young rascal had no reason for leaving except pure cussedness. He was an unthankful young scoundrel and impolitely asked for his "part of the goods." Mark that—he wanted the goods. And the old man gave him his share.

I think the old man should have had him tied up and given him a double share of cowhide. The young scamp went from bad to worse. Among strangers, he was without respect and was no doubt a dirty, lousy vagabond, too lazy to work and without energy to steal.

His resolve to go back home came of unworthiness—he wanted something. When he went away he wanted something. When he turned back he wanted something. When he got home he wanted something. The poor fool had very little sense of propriety. He had wasted his goods and came back for a divide in his brother's. No wonder the elder brother was contemptuous of his depraved relative.

It was kind in the old gentleman to have his stinking, lousy son washed, fumigated, deodorized, but with all that, the elder brother, who seems to have been a gentleman of the old school, could not divest himself of a righteous contempt of a continual beggar. It may be wrong to think so, but a returned prodigal is unfit to handle anybody's goods. He will cost too much in watching.

The man who left the Alabama democracy in '92 because he wanted something, who stayed out because he couldn't get something, and comes back holding out his hands for something is just such a prodigal as has secured, by the very merit of depravity, the contempt of those fellows who remained true to the party. And this reminds me that possibly Alabama democracy has fallen too low to take cognizance of the depravity of "color bearers." There are democratic candidates who didn't hesitate in the nineties to take other men's salaries.

I am not a metaphysician, and don't know how it is, but I heard a man say that a fellow who would appropriate and enjoy another man's salary will steal. And yet several of this kind want to be honored by the people. I believe our preachers and godly laymen should warn the voters against prodigals and good Christian men who enjoyed other men's salaries.

They say that the president appointed a horse thief marshal of Idaho! Well, where's the difference between a horse thief and a salary thief? I wish some moralist would define the difference so that if the president has at any time, in Alabama, appointed a salary thief to office, we can distinguish between the honorable gentleman in Alabama and the dishonorable fellow of Idaho. But, sure enough, as the religious people (the anti-saloonists) are taking some interest in the election of a lieutenant governor, will it not be well for them to advise the people to vote for honest men? It may be that in the general mix up there are candidates in this very race who approved of the theft of Brother Adams' salary from '92 to '96. The man who approves of theft is not far removed from a thief. If there be such in this race every honest man in Alabama should vote against him—I mean honest democrats.

Suppose the party goes ahead and nominates a thief, are honest men bound to support him? Suppose my pastor votes in the election for a dirty dog of a man, can I not, of right, have a very poor opinion of my pastor? If the preachers honor a liar, a rogue, an adulterer, by their votes, need they preach against those sins? I am just asking for information. If I vote to honor a thief, an adulterer, a murderer, am I fit to advise anybody of the "heavenly way?"

By the way, can the man who votes for Comer vote for Morgan and Pettus? As the "Grand Old Men" are to be returned because of their contemptuous disregard of Alabama sentiment, I guess it's a "black eye" for Comer.

J. C. FONVILLE.

THE SINGING AT SALEM.

The annual singing convention was held at Salem church on the fourth Sunday in May. The body was called to order at 9:30 and the following were elected officers: T. L. Robinson, chairman; D. S. Robinson, secretary. The forenoon session was occupied by the following leaders: N. J. Jones, O. Z. Robinson and Mr. Culpepper. At 11 a. m. the singing leaders gave way and Rev. J. D. Hughes preached an able sermon on the "First song service given in history," and was listened to with rapt aatention. At the close of the discourse adjournment was taken for dinner. The repast was spread under the spreading boughs of the native oaks, where all partook of the delicious morsels prepared by the good ladies, of which there seemed to be a superabundance. At 1:30 the body reassembled and the following leaders entertained the class: D. T. Melton, A. L. Robinson, T. L. Robinson, J. Henderson and Lee Robinson. Organists for the day were Misses Martha Pyron Fannie Bell Robinson, C. R. Robinson and Lee Robinson. The meeting adjourned at 3:30 p. m. to meet again on the fourth Sunday in May 1907. There were about 800 people on the ground (215 wagons and other vehicles). The behavior was fairly good considering the number of people present. Still there was some whisky on the ground and as is always the case, some people had to show the hog in them by drinking too much and showing out. B. F. Higgins and H. B. Glenn were appointed by the church to look after the interests of the church, and we understand that they have the names of several of those who acted disorderly. Sheriff Morgan had promised to be there, but for some reason did not come, but we hope to have an office rwith us next year.

CENTER POINT.

Editor Union—Health of this community is pretty good, the measles being about all gone. Cotton chopping is about done, and everybody seems to be in good heart, although the crops are small. An all-wise Providence knows the best for us, though we think we know better sometimes, but then as the Good Book says, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Well, that double barreled gun that "Just a Voter" shot off last week was sure heavily loaded and he got his game at long range. Some of the democrats admit that we are having a good and prosperous time in Chilton, and I think so, too. So why not keep on enjoying good times? We will as long as the people rule, for when the righteous rule the people rejoice; when the wicked rule the people mourn," and so we'll not make any change in this county. Well, our F. E. and C. U. of A. is getting on all right, and by attending the meetings and sticking to the order we will accomplish our desires. Rev. T. J. Deason filled his regular appointment here Saturday and Sunday. Now the time is at hand to have picnics, singings and children's days at our churches, and we hope the young men (and old ones, too) will think and not take their bottles of whisky and pistols when they go to these gatherings Young men, those two evils will never make you a man of the right sort, but if you don't shun them they'll give you a lot of trouble. I'll close by saying to East Bessie, Lover of Music and to all of the correspondents to come on with their letters to our grand and noble paper, THE UNION, so we can keep in touch with one another.

CLANTON RURAL ROUTE. 4

Mr. Editor: I take my pencil in hand to write you a few lines to let you know how we all stand in my deestrict. Aren't you surprised that the organ of democracy (Demagogery) in Chilton county would openly acknowledge that inability of his party to get any one interested in politics? Though I've heard it said that if the devil could not fool you any other way he would quote scripture (the truth) to you. "Too much prosperity," he says. Guess the people have found out not tol go to democratic mass meetings for prosperity. Wait till the people's primary and you can then easily see where the people's interests are. Hurrah for "Just a Voter." Not long since I heard one of these Solomons (?) wise advisers say that years ago he made money on the farm, but that he acted a fool and spent it in politics. If sincere, why don't he stay out of politics? Well, yes, John W. Abercrombie has recently learned that the citizens of Alabama are too illiterate to elect suitable men as county superintendents of education, and he is one of the same party that don't (?) want us disfranchised. He proposes that the county boards of education (the teachers) appoint the county superintendents of education. What do you think of that? Why not the county commissioners appoint the judge of probate, tax collector and assessor, sheriff, etc.? No, we'll continue to elect them, Mr. Abercrombie. "Republican" please do not keep us waiting longer; give us a long letter of sound doctrine. Respectfully, FARMER BOY.

MT. PLEASANT.

Health is good and farmers are well up with their work. Our local union held its regular session Saturday evening. There was a good turnout, the farmer is awaking from his slumber and becoming interested in his own welfare. Rev. B. H. Vickers preached an excellent sermon here on Sunday to a large and attentive congregation. Our Sunday school will meet at 9 o'clock a. m. through the summer months. Miss Callie Popwell was a visitor at Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Sharbutt's Sunday. The Misses Cynthia Little, John and Dovie Smith visited Mr. and Mrs. Blankenship Sunday. W. G. Culp made a flying visit down the road Sunday eve. Success to all. I am JUST A SUBSCRIBER.

CEDAR GROV7.

Mr. Editor—Our Sunday school is as good as there is in the county at present. We expect to have a children's day some time in July, and we want to make it the best we've ever had. We'll soon get out the program and expect some good speakers on good subjects. On Monday, May 28 the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Collins and took their precious little baby. "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." The entire community extends their deepest sympathy to the bereaved parents. W. W. Williams and wife, of Autauga county, visited R. W. Scott's family Saturday and Sunday. O. J. Pool was a visitor at D. H. Gentry's Saturday. W. L. Collins and wife visited R. D. Childress Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. J.R . Collins and little daughter Glennie, spent Saturday night and Sunday with J. W. Hays and family Some of our young folks were over at Macedonia Sunday at the Sunday school convention and report a nice time. Politics is getting a little warm. Yours, as ever, TOBY.

PLETCHER.

Editor Union: How I love to read the good letters from different parts of the county in the Union. It makes me want to say something through its columns myself. Rev. T. J. Deason filled his regular appointment at Pilgrims Rest on the first Sunday and preached a good sermon. Our Farmers' Union is getting along fine and "doing business" all the time through our business agent. We think we're on the right road to success if we'll just hold out faithful in the work. Brethren, let's not stop until we've got every good and honest farmer into our order. We would like to have our county lecturer pay us a visit, as we have not had a lecture since we were organized. Well, we certainly are glad to see Brother R. P.Kendrick able to come out to church again. He has been missed very much in our church work. Farmers are getting along well with their crops. J. A. Poole has done laid by his corn. With success to THE UNION and its many readers, IT'S ME.

HAPPY HOLLOW.

There is some sickness here, but we are glad that there is not more. M. H. Parker and Jesse Hays went to Birmingham Sunday. F. C. Collins and wife visited her father Sunday. J. W. Mims and family visited Joma Mims Sunday. The ball game Saturday was a success; score 13 to 11 in favor of Cedar Grove. Both sides played well Cedar Grove boys are going to Collins Chapel Saturday to try and interest the Collins Chapel boys. Game will be called at 2:30 p. m. We'd like to hear from Toby, Miss Loghead and The Male again.

SHORTY'S PET.

Our crops are starting to grow some now. William Watson was a visitor to his brother-in-law, B. F. Massey, Saturday and Sunday. Come again, Just A Voter.

TURPENTINE.

LOMAX.

We're on a boom. Aldridge and Jackson's new saw mill is nearly completed and will cut about 25000 feet per day. Elijah Jones and wife were visitors at W. W. Jones' Saturday and Sunday. W. H. Sharp was a visitor Sunday of his daughter's, Mrs. R. M. Jackson. Mrs. Lottie Hill is away on a visit to her brother, David Lodge, at Mountain Creek, R. M. Jackson's baby is very sick. J. M. Hicks, our skilled railroader, has a new boarder at his house; it is a girl. E. N. Eiland, of Bethany, was a welcome caller Saturday. Mrs. Jack Parker and Mrs. Teel visited Mrs. Hicks Sunday evening. G. Henley is on the sick list, but we hope for his speedy recovery. A. J. Oldacre was very sick last week. With best wishes to THE UNION and its readers.

Bank Your Saving's With a Safe Bank.

Every man, woman and child, no matter where they live, should have a savings account with the Citizens' Savings bank of Birmingham, for the following reasons:

It is the only bank of importance in the state which confines its banking business strictly to savings accounts and accepts no commercial business. The banking laws of Alabama provide that where a bank doing both a savings and general banking business becomes insolvent, the depositors who had savings accumulated for interest (commercial) will have preference over those who had their money in the bank for savings—in other words, the savings depositors can't be paid a cent until the commercial depositors have been paid in full.

We take no trade risks; all our loans are made on first class improved real estate mortgages or other gilt-edge collateral security—our motto being "The strength of a bank is in its individual loans."

These things, backed up by our cash capital and responsibility of our board of directors and the long and successful experiences of our officers in the banking business, render this bank as safe as United States bonds.

Bank with us by mail. It is easy and safe. Write for information.

Union Church in beat 1 is the proud possessor of three swarms of bees, which, without the formality of an invitation, have taken up their abode between the weatherboards and ceiling of the church. They were discovered last Sunday and the elders of the church, after due deliberation, have come to the conclusion to "let them work" and make honey enough to buy paint for the church. This is a sure enough departure in the many ways devised to raise money. We hope the "Busy Bees of Union" will make many pounds of honey.

Brother Pounds is sure doing good work among the "Unions." Enterprise on the last Saturday in May, Mount Pleasant on the first Saturday in June, and now Highlands on the second Saturday and Mt. Pleasant on the third Saturday at a public meeting, where he will take for his subject, "Let well enough alone." All turn out and hear him. The "Unions" are here to stay, all of them; there are thirty-nine in Chilton county now and the farmer will not only "hoe his row," but he will get "the price" for the hoeing.

LAST SATURDAY'S GAME.

The ball game at Clanton, between Clanton and Verbena clubs was a very interesting game at the beginning, but as the game progressed Headley and Johnson, Clanton's battery, by their good work, turned the tide in favor of Clanton, the score standing 17 to 7 in favor of Clanton. The features of the game was the work of Headley and Johnson. Headley pitched seven innings and only three runs were made off him. In the last inning, when the bases were filled with Verbena runners and Burkhalter at the bat with the intention of scoring all, but he only batted a fly, the ball going to Headley at first, who handled it with great care and put out four men. Success to you, ball players, and good luck to THE UNION.

WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, the Father of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

THE PULPIT.

A SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY DR. CHARLES EDWARD LOCKE.

Subject: The Sin of Irreverence.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Dr. Charles Edward Locke, in the Hanson Place M. E. Church Sunday, preached on "Popular Desecration of Sacred Vessels; or, The Sin of Irreverence." The text was from II Samuel vi:6-7: "Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God and took hold of it; and God smote him there for his error." Dr. Locke said in the course of his sermon:

There is danger that our greatest national sin shall be the sin of irreverence. The ancient story of Uzzah's act of desecration in placing his hand upon the holy ark of God is full of serious and important lessons which apply with solemn significance to our age, and our country and our individual citizenship.

God had given commendment to Moses to construct a sacred chest to be overlaid within and without with pure gold. It was to be surmounted with two cherubim of beaten gold. This casket was to be a receptacle for the Tables of Stone which Moses had received on the top of Mount Sinai, and it is beautiful ark was to be an altar of prayer which was to be kept in the midst of the people, for God had said, "There will I meet with thee." God explicitly commanded that no hand should touch the ark save the priests' and rings and poles were provided by which this sacred vessel was to be carried.

The Philistines came up against Israel and captured the ark and held it a captive for sixty years, when David conquered Philistia and builded a suitable place for the ark, and, with 30,000 warriors, went down to the borders of the enemy's country and secured possession of the precious treasure. In the excitement and joyousness of this long looked for victory, Uzzah's mortal sin of irreverence was committed, which cost him his life.

In the days of prosperity, irreverence grows most insidiously. When men feel secure in their own successes they are prone to forget the commands of God. We do not depend so helplessly on our Heavenly Father when our achievements have given us great confidence in ourselves. National and individual prosperity are at once our greatest danger and greatest security. In the frenzy of victory, as did Uzzah, so do we often commit acts of irreverence.

Sometimes it is fashionable to be irreverent. The Philistines, in transporting the ark, had placed it upon an ox cart, and when the Israelites captured the ark they followed the error of the Philistines and were returning with the ark drawn by oxen, instead of carried by the staves and rings, as God had peremptorily commanded. One act of irreverence leads to another. And when the ark shook as the cart went over Nachon's threshing floor, Uzzah heedlessly committed his serious offense. When the church allows the world to set its fashions, sacrileges, disastrous and deplorable, speedily follow.

Two other fruitful causes of irreverence are forgetfulness and familiarity. The ark had been in Uzzah's house since his boyhood and he dared to take privileges with the sacred furniture. Familiarity sometimes breeds contempt. It is not discoverable that Uzzah was either malicious or willful, but he was heedless, and even so apparently a harmless sin as heedlessness brought upon him the awful penalty for his disobedience. The influence of sacred things depends upon their sacredness being preserved. God could not control Israel without their respect and obedience, hence the suffering of Uzzah. No sin is more treacherous than irreverence. It decoys its victims. It is like dry rot in the ship's timbers. Irreverence slyly gains admittance where grosser evils would be easily repulsed. Satan is constantly busy trying to transform the sons of Levi, who serve at holy altars, into the sons of Eli. Beware of the deceptive tendencies of familiarity; when delicate respect for holy things is lost, then defilement and sacrilege easily enter. When reverence departs character cannot be retained, for character depends upon faith and in obedience to sacred things.

At Belshazzar's feast, in the supposed impregnable city of Babylon, it was the towering crime of irreverence in defiling the sacred vessels of the temple worship at Jerusalem that brought disaster and death to the dissolute young monarch. What are some of the holy things to-day which must be honored and preserved?

The church is a sacred vessel. Dedicated to the service of God, it should not be diverted into secular uses. Jesus drove the merchants out of the courts of the temple, and, as yet, there has been no permission granted for their return. The sons of Aaron were devoured by the strange fire which they undertook to offer at the altars of the Lord. And similar results occur today in the consuming of holy instincts and respectful inclinations, when the church of God is made a place of amusement and merchandizing. In chapels and parish houses many things are proper which in the sanctuary lead unmistakably to irreverence.

The Bible is a most sacred vessel. There is not much danger of bibliolatry, but we need to be much on our guard lest the very availability of our Greek Book shall cause it to be less appreciated. Things are often valued by use in proportion to the sacrifice which has been suffered for them. A gentleman placed a copy of the Gospel of St. John on my desk the other day, and said it cost only two cents. It was in excellent type and neatly bound. During the days of the persecution of Diocletian, many Christians surrendered their Bibles and the sacred utensils of worship, and in consequence lost their faith. When the Bible goes out of our lives, our Christian character loses its chief support. A man once, in the presence of his family, picked up a Bible, turned its pages carelessly for a few moments, and petulantly threw it down upon the table, saying, "Pshaw! give me Shakespeare." Perhaps he never knew that the Bible was the acknowleged inspiration of the marvelous lines of Avon's greatest bard; it is certain no man ever prefers any other book who has discovered the extraordinary beauty and power of the Bible.

We must valiantly defend the Bible against irreverence. It is the bulwark of our civilization—the foundation of liberty, the cornerstone of truth. I submit whether we do not commit a serious offense against the sacredness of the Book when we indulge in constant jokes and puns based upon the Scriptures. It cannot be anything less than sinful sacrilege to weave the holy personages and incidents of Bible history into ridiculous story. The Bible deals with most serious questions which involve the life and death and weal and woe of the race, and do we not violate its sacred rights when we make it the basis of our fun and laughter? This is a popular desecration, which, like Uzzah's sin, has been committed so long that it has not occurred to many people that they are unintentionally undermining the very book which they desire most to defend.

The Sabbath is a sacred vessel. A divinely instituted day, for rest and worship and home. We cannot spare the Sabbath, but we cannot keep it if it is steadily allowed to become more and more a social and a business day. All vices and enemies of our nation thrive best where the first day of the week is decreasingly reverenced. Dinner parties and hilarious outings arranged for the Sabbath are direct attacks upon the security of our republic. The perpetuity of a nation depends upon the reverence of the people. When the temples are empty, the walls of the citadel crumble. When the altars of worship are neglected, virtue and purity are dethroned, a nation's protectors lose their courage and spirit of sacrifice and there is speedily decline and fall. God has put Himself on record as ready to cause those nations to "ride upon the high places of the earth" which keep His Sabbaths. History fulfils in every century the curses of the Almighty which have rested upon those people who have destroyed His holy day. Why do we argue the question when he who runs may read?

The human body is a sacred vessel. What a marvelous gift is the voice, with its capabilities of music and speech. Alas, that ever its powers are profaned! Consider, too, the tastes and appetites and muscular possibilities and vital forces. What exquisite joys God has invested in the human body! But, desecrated and disregarded, how this body may become a bundle of clashing nerves, a prison-pen full of cruel and warring enemies. God's great apostle wrote, "If any man defile the temple of God," as the body is called, "him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

The human mind—soul—is a sacred vessel. A man is not with "all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Man is the upward looking animal. His mind has been created with powers of concentration and analysis, that he might find out God. When man uses his faculties against his Creator, he has desecrated a sacred vessel. Man's logical faculty and powers of invention are often diverted to the injury instead of the elevation of men. A prostituted printing press is doing much in "vampire literature" to violate the human mind. A bad book or an immodest picture is a poisoned arrow driven into the mind, from which an absolute recovery is not possible. Each must revere his own mind, and shield himself from the ten thousand inimical influences that are intended to thrive on the spoliation of pure natures. How empty would be the playhouses and how bankrupt many of the publishers if the American people would suddenly refuse to be any longer the receptacles for the filth and corruption of many of the popular books and most of the popular dramas.

Josephus says that in the closing scenes of Jerusalem, such were the irreverent and sacrilegeous practices of the people, that if the Romans had not destroyed the city, some dreadful judgment like that which befell Sodom would have come upon that city. Thus, indeed, have nations and cities and individuals disappeared under the disintegrating processes of irreverence.

As the bold and wicked Belshazzar was, in revelry and drunkenness, defiling the sacred vessels of the Lord, a white hand came out of the black sleeve of the night, and wrote, in letters of fire, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting!" And that night the irreverent young king was found dead in his palace. The inexorable penalty of irreverence is death!

But they who bear reverently the ark of God, who obediently follow the commands of God, who daily honor in thought and deed the Son of God, who hold in highest esteem the privileges of the sons of God, shall enjoy peace and joy forever more, for the reward of reverence is life—here and hereafter!

Drawn Toward the Unseen Country.

We have secured a property right in the unseen country because dear ones have migrated thither, and it now exerts a more immediate and vital influence upon us. An old lady who had made full acquaintance with bereavement was asked if she ever received intimation of the presence of those who had parted from her, and she replied that she sometimes felt "a drawing." Daniel Webster, in lines of tribute to his angel child, touchingly says that he had expected to become the teacher of the boy, but that now, instead, the boy has become the ancestor, the father and the guide; and the great statesman humbly beseeches the sainted one to lead him on in the earthly path. Surely, all who have experienced a genuine sorrow by the entrance of death into the cherished circle, says Rev. H. P. Dewey, are constrained, if they have held to the Christian faith, to feel that Heaven has become nearer and dearer, that life has become more sacred and duty more commanding, and that the gracious ministry of the loved ones has been continued, though the veil has hidden them from sight.

The Prayer Which Avails.

Six characteristics of the prayer which avails may be named as follows:

1. It presents a need.
2. It is importunate.
3. It is according to the will of God.
4. It is faith.
5. It is in Christ's name.
6. It is for the glory of God.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

THE RAG-MAN.

In all cities of the world,
In towns both new and old,
There's seen a man who does not mind
How great the heat or cold.
He comes with sound of jangling bells,
He calls aloud to you,
"Old rags I'll take, and I would like
Your empty bottles, too."
So then with refuse from our door
He fills his little cart,
While we, impatient of delay,
Wait for him to depart.
We watch him go and wonder where
And on what rubbish heap,
He'll dump the rags and bottles, too,
Before he goes to sleep.
—Josephine Canning, in Churchman.

WON THE GOLDEN BALL.

A former Sultan—so runs the story—offered a golden ball for lying. Many lied to him, but the Sultan replied that he could himself lie better. Finally an aged man from Angora appeared before him with a large jar on his shoulders. "Your father," he said, "borrowed a large jar like this full of gold from my father and said that you would repay the gold to his son." "Impossible!" said the Sultan. "If the story be true," replied the pilgrim, "pay your father's debt. "If impossible, I have won the golden ball." The Sultan at once awarded him the prize.

THE TRAY AND THE PELLETS.

The accompanying picture almost explains itself. It is a round wooden tray, with a rim about half an inch in height, and four pairs of raised partitions arranged around the inner edge.

In the tray are four pellets, or very small marbles, and the puzzle is to work one marble into each compartment.

It looks simple and easy, but try it and see what skilful handling is necessary to do it. You could amuse a roomful of people an entire evening with it.

An ingenious boy can make the apparatus. A wooden tray may be had at a house-furnishing store, and the partitions are easily glued in place.—Good Literature.

MARK TWAIN'S STORY.

Mark Twain on his last visit to his old home in Hannibal, Mo., told to the school children a true story about a schoolboy.

"This boy," he said, "awoke one morning very ill. His groans alarmed the household. The doctor was sent for, and came post haste.

"'Well,' said the doctor as he entered the sick room, 'what is the trouble?'

"'A pain in the side,' said the boy.

"'A pain in the head?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Is the right hand stiff?'

"'A little.'

"'How about the right foot?'

"'That's stiff, too.'

"The doctor winked at the boy's mother.

"'Well,' he said, 'you're pretty sick. But you'll be able to go to school on Monday. Let me see, to-day is Saturday, and——'

"'Is to-day Saturday?' said the boy in a vexed tone, 'I thought it was Friday.'

"Half an hour later the boy declared himself healed, and got up. Then they packed him off to school, for it was Friday, after all."

WHO IS WATCHING THE BIRDS?

Are you? What birds have you seen near your home? Have you seen or heard a robin, a wren, a bluebird, a woodpecker (flicker), a blackbird, or a cat-bird? Have you heard or seen a bobolink or a crow or a bobwhite or a cedar bird or a goldfinch or a hummingbird or an oriole or a song sparrow or a thrush or a scarlet tanager? asks the Children's Magazine.

Those who know much about birds tell us that the birds' notes are quite distinct and sound like the following words. What do they say to you?

Robin: "Quick! Quick! Do you think—what do you, do you think—what do you, do you think?"

Bluebird: "Purity! Purity! I—oh—purity." "Dear! Dear! Think of it, think of it!"

Bobolink: "Bob-o-lee, Bob-o-link, Bob-o-link-e."

Crow: "Caw-w!"

Cedar bird: "Tze! tze! tze!"

Bodwhite (quail): "Bob-bob-white!" "More—more—wet!"

Goldfinch (yellowbird): "Ker-chee-chee-chee, whew-e, whew-e."

Humming-bird: Mouselike squeak.

Oriole: "Will you? Will you really, really, truly?" Female answers, "I will."

Song sparrow: "Olit, olit, olit—chip, chip, chip, che-char-che-wiss, wiss, wiss!"

Thrush: "Drop it, drop it, cover it up, cover it up, pull it up, pull it up."

Bluejay: "Jay, jay, jay. Whee-dle, whee-dle!"

Scarlet tanager: "Chip-chirr. "Pshaw! Wait-wait-wait for me, wait!"

Blackbird: "Kong-quer-ree," or "Bob-a-lee, a-bob-a-lee."

STEER THAT STALKS GEESE.

In a number of counties lying on both sides of the Sacramento River, in the central portion of California, the farmers are greatly harassed every winter by the depredations of countless flocks of wild geese, which swarm over the broad grain fields and destroy the young, sprouting grainstalks. Indeed, so serious has this annual invasion become, declares the Youth's Companion, that nearly all the large farms have employes who regularly patrol the fields and do nothing but keep the feathered pests on the wing.

One of the most novel blinds or stalkers ever used in that section, or any other, for the purpose of destroying the geese, is that of a Colusa farmer who lives on the bank of the Sacramento. He has a big red steer which he has trained to stalk geese. The steer walks round a flock of geese in an ever decreasing circle, his master, armed with a repeating shotgun, walking beside him,, but on the further side from the flock.

The geese have become so used to seeing animals grazing near that they pay no attention to them; so the farmer is enabled to get within shotgun distance and pour a broadside into the flock while it is feeding on the ground, and two more shots before the birds are out of range when they rise.

This dumb hunter is held in great esteem by its owner and his family, it is needless to state, and receives the best of everything.

CHEMICAL EXPERIMENTS.

Collecting gases under water is a pretty experiment. You will need a deep pan, a tin saucer and some rubber tubing. Fill the pan with water so that it covers the jar when the latter is lying on its side. See that the jar is entirely full of water, and that no bubble of air remains in it. If bubbles do form, empty the jar and fill it over again.

If now the jar be turned mouth downwards, still keeping it under water, says the Philadelphia Record, it will remain full. When you have tried this so you see that it can be done, place the tin saucer upside down in the bottom of the deep pan, and rest the jar full of water on it.

The saucer should have a small hole cut in the middle of the bottom, and also one in the side, as shown in the picture. A piece of rubber tubing is now fastened to the end of the glass tube leading from the jar in which the gas is made, and the other end of the rubber tube, which should be about two feet long, is pushed under the tin saucer through the hole in the side, and then up into the jar through the hole in the bottom.

As the gas is made in the other jar, it will pass through the tube, bubbling up into the jar full of water to the top until it finally presses the water down and out of the jar, the gas remaining in it.

To separate a powder from a liquid with which it has been mixed, procure some filter paper, which may be bought in small circular pieces, as shown in Figure A. Fold one of these circular pieces as shown in Figure B, and draw it closer into funnel form, as in Figure C. Then place it in a glass funnel, as at D, and pour through it the mixed liquid and powder. The liquid will pass slowly through the funnel, leaving the powder behind it.

The End of the Play.

Never remain seated until the end of the play, or the rest of the audience will not think you blase or sufficiently European.—Portland Morning Oregonian.

Experiments are being made at Montreaux, France, with a new electric searchlight of 90,000,000 candle-power that will project rays fifty miles.

NEWS AND NOTES FOR WOMEN

THE DRESSMAKERS' TERROR.

Women who sew in families have troubles of their own. Most often it is the sewing machine.

"It is mighty funny," said a lean-fingered dressmaker, "why people who have enough money to buy clothes that would make the Queen of Sheba turn green with envy cannot afford decent machines for their home dressmakers to sew on. Nobody need tell me that Elias Howe invented the sewing machine in 1843—or some such year. He didn't do anything of the kind. He may have studied out an improvement on the original about that time, but I am positive that there were crude products turned out several hundred years ago, and I am asked to work on them every day. These heirlooms have the funniest bobbins and shuttles and threading arrangements imaginable, and they rumble and rattle like a threshing machine. As for attachments, there are none. Only yesterday I was banging away on one of those Noah's Ark reminiscences when the owner of the same came in with a beautiful piece of crepe de chine.

"'I want a tucked waist made of this,' she said, 'and I want the tucks to be little teenty things—just as narrow.'

"'Very well,' said I. 'Is there a tucker to this machine?'

"'Oh, dear no,' she said. 'You'll have to get along without that. You'll have to use your eyes.'

"The excuse well-to-do families give for harboring these prehistoric relics is that they have so little sewing done in the house that it really isn't worth while to get a new machine. If they only knew it they'd save enough on wages in a little while to buy a good machine."—New York Press.

THE BRIDE'S VEIL.

Lace veils are not always becoming, and tulle veils invariably are, which is one reason why the tulle veil is more generally seen. A grandmother's or mother's wedding veil is not always a thing of joy to deal with, even when the lace is of the most costly description. Its folds sometimes hang in too stiff lines or it is of a shape or length almost impossible to drape becomingly. The tulle veil, on the contrary, can be most easily arranged and made becoming, while if desired it may be bordered with lace of the most expensive description.

The present style of coiffure also enables the veil to be becoming, the pompadour giving a basis to which to pin the wreath or half-wreath, and then to fasten the veil under the flowers. The veil never is so becoming with the hair arranged low as high on the head, for the knob or braid holds the veil out too far from the head to give good lines. It is astonishing how much difference all these details make in the general appearance, and too much care cannot be bestowed upon them. Often the most inexpensively gowned bride will look far better than one whose gowns and veil have cost a fabulous amount, simply because the veil is becomingly arranged and the style is better suited to the wearer.—Harper's Bazar.

TULLE FOR WEDDING BOUQUET.

The use of tulle in a wedding bouquet and caught among the flowers at a wedding breakfast is a little touch wedding veil with it, says the Washington Times.

For the bouquet, the tulle is usually looped carelessly among the flowers, and used, perhaps, instead of ribbon, to tie the stems and to float off in long, graceful ends.

For the table it may be tied in the same way among the flowers, or long ends made to trail down the long cloth, draped from some central, rather high, point. But it must be carefully done, or the result is anything but graceful, and above all, it must be arranged so that no stray draught of air can waft it into the candle flames.

Only white flowers, with plenty of green foliage, should be used with tulle.

Long scarfs of tulle, draped into artistic knots, with a couple of flowers and a bit of green were used by one bride to replace the more usual ribbon or cord which is drawn down both sides of the aisle.

MARY STUART BONNET GENERALLY BECOMING.

While there is no question but that the mourning of the present day borders on the eccentric in comparison with the mourning of past years, there is much that is practical about it and grief is expressed just as much in the present mourning style as when it was thought requisite to go about completely shrouded in dull black and heavy crepe.

The small bonnet on the Mary Stuart shape with a point in front is now rarely to be seen, and even older women wear bonnets that are larger and more on the lines of hats than bonnets. Crepe is just as fashionable as ever, but the veil now is so draped that it all falls at the back of the hat, and over the face is worn only a net veil with crepe border. RADISH AND OLIVE SALAD.

Put two cup-shaped lettuce leaves together on a small plate, one for each person. Slice a small radish thin and lay round in a circle in the center and on this put a spoonful of minced or shredded olives. Make a dressing from one level teaspoon of salt, a salt spoon of paprika, a few grains of pepper, six tablespoons of oil and three tablespoons of vinegar. Pour over the salad at the moment of serving.

JAM PUDDING STEAMED.

Take half a pound of breadcrumbs, four ounces of suet, one ounce of flour, two eggs, four tablespoonfuls of any jam (stoneless). Chop the suet, mix it with the flour and breadcrumbs. Beat up the eggs with the jam, and add these to the breadcrumbs, etc.

Well grease a pudding-basin, pour in the mixture, twist a piece of greased paper over the top and steam it for one hour.

Let it stand for a minute or two, then turn it out carefully. Custard is a good addition to this pudding.

CREAM CHEESE SALADS.

An appetizing salad for dinner is made of cream cheese. Roll the cheese into little balls with butter paddles, heap the balls on lettuce leaves or endive and pour French dressing over them. A rather more elaborate salad is made by mixing with the cheese minced parsley and paprika, molding the mixture in little egg cups and placing on the ice to chill. Serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing. Still another way of serving the cheese balls is to line small fluted timbale molds with aspic, then when this is set place in the center a ball of cheese and on the cheese a stoned olive filled with aspic. When serving turn onto a dish and place about the cheese mounds celery finely minced and mixed with mayonnaise dressing.

PISTACHE AND ORANGE MERINGUES.

This is one of the daintiest ways of serving cream for a little dinner or lawn fete. The pistache nuts can be bought at the wholesale nut stores or in the Syrian quarter of the city. Shell and blanch two pounds of the little nuts, then pound in a mortar to a smooth paste, flavoring with the orange flower water. Make a vanilla cream, with or without eggs as preferred, add the nut paste and freeze. It is as well to buy the meringues at the bakers as it is not worth while to spend time and strength on them when they can be obtained readily. Press a spoonful of cream between the shells and serve on small plates.

AN ECONOMICAL DINNER.

Fore quarter of lamb is the most economical roast to be had, and one of the very best. Order a large piece, at least seven pounds, and have 5 or six chops taken off first, and then two pounds of the neck and rib ends for a stew or lamb pie. The shoulder-blade and bits of bone are to be made into a soup with the ordinary vegetables, and either a cup of beans, mashed, or a cup of tomato, to give body to it; the whole, of course, served clear.

The roast may or may not be stuffed in the pocket left by the shoulder-blade's removal; the peas may be canned ones for convenience, or a fresh vegetable, such as cauliflower, may be substituted. If one wishes to have this a company dinner, a simple green salad may follow the lamb, with French dressing and wafers.—Harper's Bazar.

MOCK TURTLE.

Take a small shoulder of mutton and hang it for several days, bone it, and lay it on a chopping board. Mix together half a teaspoonful of pepper and the same quantity of ground mace and with it sprinkle the meat. Lay on the meat a dozen oysters and scatter over breadcrumbs, pepper and salt. Roll the meat neatly, sew down the flap, and tie around with a string. Place it in a saucepan with a small quantity of water and add an onion stuck with cloves and four long peppers. Cover the pan closely, turn the meat constantly while it is slowly cooking. Take a pint of white stock, thicken it with a piece of butter the size of a pigeon's egg worked into flour, and add to it a dozen oysters. Dish the meat, remove the tape, and pour the sauce over. Garnish with tufts of parsley and slices of gherkins down the centre of the meat. For cooking allow twenty minutes to every pound of meat, and be sure that it stews slowly all the time.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Never allow a cake of fat to remain on the top of soups and stews. It makes them turn sour more quickly than they otherwise would.

Apple sauce need not always have the same flavor. Lemon or orange peel, lemon juice or a little cinnamon will make a variety.

Try putting a little salt in the water in which your matting is washed.

Honey and a decoction of sage leaves is a splendid remedy for sore throat.

To get rid of ants, mix equal parts of sugar and borax and sprinkle shelves and doors.

A layer of brown paper put on the kitchen table under the oilcloth will prevent the latter from cracking and make it wear longer.

Novel Fire Alarm.

The firing of maroons, or small shells, which explode with a loud noise to call the fire brigade in case of fire, has caused complaint in Hounslow, England. During a recent call the exploding maroons, it is alleged, caused the death of an infant and the serious illness of a woman from fright. The authorities, however, have decided that the quick summoning of the fire brigade is of more importance than the complaints of the nervous, and the use of the maroons is to be continued. Explosive shells are a novel fire alarm.

England's Wealthy Peer.

One of the wealthiest peers in England is Earl Fitzwilliam, who is the possessor of some 115,000 acres of land in England and Ireland. Under the recent land purchase measure, however, he has disposed of some of his Wicklow property. Some twenty years ago the Fitzwilliam estates were put at about 92,000 acres in Ireland, worth $250,000 per annum, and about 24,000 acres in England, worth about $440,000 a year.

Sheep With a Wooden Leg.

A sheep with a wooden leg is a curiosity at the farm of Ira Quaintance in Dallas township. Early this year the sheep was struck by lightning, its foot and part of the leg being torn off. As the animal was a valuable one, Quaintance concluded to try an artificial limb. He covered it with wool, and so well does the sheep use it that people would not detect the difference except for a slight limp.

A New Delicacy.

An authority says that the tip of the tail of a young alligator which has reached the "pullet" period is a rare delicacy. It corresponds favorably with frogs' legs, with a more pronounced gamy flavor. They are best at this time of year, just after the rice bird season, when the young alligator has been feasting on them for weeks.

A strange custom in Sinai is the testing by fire of suspected criminals. The judge places an iron pan in the fire until it is red hot. He then wipes it three times with his hand and gives it to the accused to touch three times with his tongue. If marks of burning are shown on the tongue the accused is pronounced guilty. It is thought that if the accused is guilty his tongue dries up from fear of being discovered, and that it will be burnt; but that if he is not guilty the moisture on the tongue prevents it from being burnt. Two experts sit with the judge to witness whether the tongue of the accused is burnt or not.

Take a Mull's Wafer any time of the day or night, and note the immediate good effect on your stomach. It absorbs the gas, disinfects the stomach, kills the poison germs and cures the disease. Catarrh of the head and throat, unwholesome food and overeating make bad stomachs. Scarcely any stomach is entirely free from taint of some kind. Mull's Anti-Belch Wafers will make your stomach healthy by absorbing foul gases which arise from the undigested food and by re-enforcing the lining of the stomach, enabling it to thoroughly mix the food with the gastric juices. This cures stomach trouble, promotes digestion, sweetens the breath, stops belching and fermentation. Heart action becomes strong and regular through this process.

TERRIBLE ITCHING SCALP.

Eczema Broke Out Also on Hands and Limbs—An Old Soldier Declares: "Cuticura is a Blessing."

"At all times and to all people I am willing to testify to the merits of Cuticura. It saved me from worse than the torture of hades, about the year 1900, with itching on my scalp and temples, and afterwards it commenced to break out on my hands. Then it broke out on my limbs. I then went to a surgeon, whose treatment did me no good, but rather aggravated the disease. I then told him I would go and see a physician in Erie. The reply was that I could go anywhere, but a case of eczema like mine could not be cured; that I was too old (80). I went to an eminent doctor in the city of Erie and treated with him for six months, with like results. I had read of the Cuticura Remedies, and so I sent for the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent, and continued taking the Resolvent until I had taken six bottles, stopping it to take the Pills. I was now getting better. I took two baths a day, and at night I let the lather of the Soap dry on. I used the Ointment with great effect after washing in warm water, to stop the itching at once. I am now cured. The Cuticura treatment is a blessing, and should be used by every one who has itching of the skin. I can't say any more, and thank God that He has given the world such a curative. Wm. H. Gray, 3303 Mt. Vernon St., Philadelphia, Pa., August 2, 1905."

Life on This Ship Like Being on Land.

The latest giant of the sea which has been introduced to this port is the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, the largest passenger steamer ever built, says a recent New York dispatch. She is a Hamburg-American liner and was built at Stettin, Germany.

Bartholdi's mammoth statue of Liberty raises its torch 155 feet from its base. From bow to stern of the new ship an animate Liberty might stretch her length more than four times.

The Kaiserin is 700 feet in length with a beam of 77 feet, and a depth from the boat deck to keel of 87 feet. She weighs 25,500 tons, and when she carries her capacity cargo the waters under her will have to bear up 75,000 tons.

She is in truth a floating hotel, accommodating 3,500 guests. Among the new features of this ship is dining a la carte. Then there is a gymnasium. There is a large library and a music room. There is a palm garden, where passengers may luxuriate amid green foliage and flowers cut fresh daily from a deck conservatory.

Nine decks tower one above the other, like a city skyscraper. Two daily newspapers are printed on board, both receiving wireless news and running in hot competition. One feature of the kitchen is a kosher department for the accommodation of Jewish passengers.

The ship carries nearly 600 men and women in its crew.

For a single trip 3,000 tons of coal is consumed.

Assuming that the salt air will serve appetite, the ship's steward on every trip will store away among other things 85,000 pounds of meat and fish, exclusive of twenty tons of herrings, for the immigrants; 5,000 pounds of butter, 3,500 pounds of cheese, 50,000 pounds of flour, 4,100 pounds of coffee, 15,000 pounds of cereals and rice, 36,000 dozen eggs, 12,000 pounds of bread, eighty boxes of oranges, 3,500 pounds of sugar, 4,000 pounds of sauer kraut and 16,000 quarts of beer.

The big ship makes eighteen knots an hour, and is scheduled to make the trip across the Atlantic in eight days.

Diving for Amber.

Amber is supposed to be gum which exuded from trees that in some former geological age covered certain parts of the earth's surface, but of which now not a vestige remains. In corroboration of this theory we have evidence of insects found imbedded in the amber, showing every evidence of having struggled hard to free themselves from the sticky substance upon which they had alighted or been driven.

The shores of the Baltic Sea are the world's principal source of amber Here a large number of people earn a precarious livelihood by gathering the precious substance along the shore. They work only in rough weather, for it is only then that the boulders are tossed and tumbled on the bottom and great quantities of submarine vegetation dislodged, hidden among the roots and branches of which are lumps of the precious gum. At some points along the coast divers search the bottom of the sea for lumps of amber hidden in seaweed or jammed between rocks. The largest piece ever found weighed eighteen pounds, valued at $30,000. It is now in the Royal Museum in Berlin.

A CRITICAL PERIOD

INTELLIGENT WOMEN PREPARE

Dangers and Pain of This Critical Period Avoided by the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

How many women realize that the most critical period in a woman's existence is the change of life, and that the anxiety felt by women as this time draws near is not without reason?

If her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to apoplexy or congestion of any organ, it is at this time likely to become active and, with a host of nervous irritations, make life a burden.

At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to begin their destructive work. Such warning symptoms as a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, dizziness, headache, dread of impending evil, sounds in the ears, timidity, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period of life when woman's great change may be expected.

We believe Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the world's greatest remedy for women at this trying period.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism, and builds up the weakened nervous system as no other medicine can.

Mrs. A. E. G. Hyland, of Chestertown, Md., in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham, says:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I had been suffering with a displacement for years and was passing through the change of life. I had a good deal of soreness, dizzy spells, headaches, and was very nervous. I wrote you for advice and commenced treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as you directed, and I am happy to say that all those distressing symptoms left me, and I have passed safely through the change of life a well woman."

For special advice regarding this important period women are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass She is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge. Her advice is free and always helpful to ailing women.

GORMAN DEAD

The Senator Dies Peacefully —Long and Distinguished Career Closes.

FUNERAL THURSDAY.

At His Request the Cermony was Simple—Conducted at His Private Residence in Washington.

Washington, D. C.—Senator Arthur Pue Gorman, of Maryland, died of neuralgia of the heart Monday morning. His death has only been a question of time, the senator himself realizing several months ago that there was no hope for him.

He had suffered from neuralgia all his life, but in the last eighteen months the attacks became more frequent and severe, and in speaking of his ailment to a friend last December he expressed the fear that it would soon reach his heart. A week ago last Saturday the senator had a severe attack, but rallied. At 8 o'clock Monday morning he was better than he had been for a month, and to his family and friends his sudden death came as a great surprise.

The funeral was held at Senator Gorman's late residence, No. 1432 K street, northwest, at 11 o'clock Thursday morning.

Senator Gorman, in a written request addressed to Mrs. Gorman, asked that no state funeral should be held. He said that he did not wish his body to be brought to the capitol, as he wanted his colleagues at Washington to think of him as they knew him in life, as an active senator. There he was always cheerful and invariably smiling, and it is regarded as characteristic of his disposition that he should desire so to be remembered.

Fifteen Guards Shot in Fight.

Cleveland, O.—A special to the Leader from Steubenville, O., says:

Fifteen guards were shot Sunday night in a fight in the Plum Run mine between forty guards and 400 coal mine strikers. It is not known how many of the guards were killed, and the guards who were not wounded in the fight are in the mine and are afraid to come out to remove or attend those who were shot.

Sheriff Voorhis, of Jefferson county, is in communication with the state house and may persuade Governor Pattison to call out the militia to prevent further bloodshed.

H. E. Willard, general manager and secretary of the United States Coal Company, which runs and operates the Plum Run mine, has been communicated with at his home in Cleveland.

The miners, as usual, held numerous meetings throughout the county Sunday, and most of these were stormy, the leaders urging the men to remain firm. The latter have been in an angry mood for a week because their strike benefits have not been paid. As a result they left these meetings with a bitter feeling against the strike breakers and the guards.

Twenty Thousand Tailors to Strike.

New York.—Twenty thousand tailors on the East Side are preparing for a general strike for a uniform wage scale and a shorted work day. A meeting was called under the auspices of the Brotherhood of Tailors, to be held Saturday to hear reports from various shops.

About 800 tailors have gone on strike of their own initiative in the shops of Heller, Rothschild and Langdon.

Town Washed Away.

Ironton, O.—Scottown, a village twenty miles north of Ironton, with a population of 200, has been washed away. Not a house was left on its foundation. Mrs. Sayre and daughter were drowned. Bridges were washed away and telephone lines are down.

Newspaper Men in Session.

Louisville, Ky.—The national association of managers of newspaper circulation opened their annual convention here Tuesday, the first session being devoted mainly to welcoming addresses. Denver, Milwaukee and Hampton Roads, Va., are already in the field for the next convention.

Charges of Bribery in Convention.

Jefferson City, Mo.—The democratic state convention met here for the nomination of railroad and warehouse commissioners. Charges were circulated that bribery had been attempted to influence delegates. It was openly charged that an attempt had been made to buy four delegates, the sum of $250 being offered for each vote.

Coburn to Succeed in Senate.

Topeka, Kas.—Foster Dwight Coburn, the widely known agriculturist, has been appointed United States senator by Gov. E. W. Hoch to succeed J. Ralph Burton, who has resigned. Mr. Coburn has not definitely accepted the appointment. Mr. Coburn was not a candidate for the apointment nor has he been a candidate for the election to the senatorial seat to be filled by the legislature next year.

Alabama Gleanings.

New Corporations.

Montgomery, Ala.—Papers of incorporation have been filed with the secretary of state announcing the establishment of the Montgomery Heights Company, of this city, for the purpose of carrying on a real estate business. The incorporators of the company are R. L. Dillard, Thomas Dillard and Thomas W. Martin. The capital stock of the company was stated as $10,000.

The Sheffield Trust Company, of Sheffield, Colbert county, was another corporation to file papers with the secretary of state. This company, capitalized at $100,000, with $25,000 stock paid in, was incorporated by the following persons: George Parsons, J. W. Worthington and Henry Parsons.

The Mineral Belt Railway Company, organized for the purpose of building a road from Florence, in Lauderdale county, northward to the Tennessee line in Wayne county, filed papers of incorporation. These papers bore the date, May 29. The company is capitalized at $50,000, the incorporators being M. E. McDonald, Alexander H. Sherrerd, L. Alexander May, Thurston H. Allen and James E. Burr.

Another company to file papers of incorporation was the Jaggers Coal Company, of Jasper, Walker county. The object of the company, as stated in the papers, was to mine coal and manufacture coke and other mine products. The names of the incorporators were Peyton Norvell, H. W. Crawford and W. S. Payne. The capital stock was set forth as being $50,000.

Gray's Attorneys Want Case Heard.

Montgomery, Ala.—Attorneys for H. B. Gray have filed an application to have the supreme court set aside the continuance of the case of Gray against the Louisville and Nashville and allow it to be submitted next Thursday. The submission was set for last Thursday, but because of the crowded condition of the supreme court docket and the allegation of the railroad attorneys that they were not ready it was continued for the term.

The appeal is from a judgment of ouster issued on quo warranto proceedings by the city court of Montgomery, wherein the Louisville and Nashville is deprived of the right to operate and control the South and North division. It is argued that the importance of the litigation makes it necessary that it should be argued at the present term of the state's court of last resort.

N. C. Ellis Dead at Midway.

Union Springs, Ala.—N. C. Ellis, of this place, died at Midway, in this county, Saturday at the home of his father-in-law, the Rev. N. C. Underwood. Mr. Ellis had been in bad health for some time and his death was not unexpected. He was a member of the firm of J. M. Ellis Sons Company, of this place, and was a successful business man. He leaves a young wife and many relatives and friends. His remains reached here Sunday morning and the funeral took place Sunday afternoon.

Telephones Popular in Madison.

Huntsville, Ala.—Madison county is rapidly being covered with a net work of telephone wires radiating from Huntsville. The Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company has just finished a line connecting the city with the exchange of the Inter-County Telephone Company, placing twenty or thirty rural stations in Morgan and Madison counties in connection with the world. The Moore's Hill community was connected last week and other lines are being planned. The farmers' lines are becoming popular, and in a short time every neighborhood in the county will have connection with the city.

Meet in Anniston.

Anniston, Ala.—From a letter received by J. A. Vanden Burg, the annual convention of the Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union of America, Alabama division, is practically assured for Anniston in August. The coming of this convention here is perhaps the greatest compliment yet given Anniston since she became a convention city.

At any rate, it will be the largest convention yet to assemble here, as there will probably be 700 delegates in attendance. As an educator perhaps this convention will exceed any others, as the topics before the convention will be intensely practical and correspondingly far reaching.

Decatur, Ala.—City Clerk James Edwards met with a painful accident. Mr. Edwards owns a furniture factory here, and while at the factory looking over the plant his foot slipped, throwing him into a hole. Two of his ribs were broken, and he was also quite badly bruised about the body. He will necessarily be confined to his room for a number of days.

Celebrate Davis' Birthday.

Cordele, Ga.—The Daughters of the Confederacy are preparing to celebrate Jeff Davis' birthday. Inasmuch as the date, June 3, falls on Sunday, the exercises will occur Monday, June 4, at the Elks' hall at 4 o'clock.

Five Blacksmith Go Out on Strike.

Americus, Ga.—The five blacksmiths who are employed here by the Seaboard Air Line railway, have gone on a strike for higher wages.

ball playing is all the go now. Last Saturday some of our boys assisted Thorsby on to victory over Clanton. The game was played on Waddy's field. Mahan, Waddy's twirler, was knocked out of the box the first inning and Downing took his place, but he also went up in the air. He has a good curve, plenty of speed, but had no control. It looked like Clanton's game with seven runs, but Kilgore goes in the pitch and held Clanton under his wing for three innings, and then Mahan took hold and finished the game. After the dust had cleared away it was found that the score stood: Waddy 11, Clanton, 10. The feature of the game was Downing and Conway catching the second baseman of Clanton trying to steal home. WYLAM.

It is beginning to feel like summer here. Protracted meeting still going and drawing large crowds, especially at night. Dr. Miller, of Tipton, Ga., has had to go home, leaving Rev. H. C. Brabham to close the meeting. We were sorry to lose Dr. Miller, for he sure did touch up the sinners and made the professing Christians open their eyes and find themselves not doing their duty. Mr. J. L. Cauley and family spent Sunday in North Birmingham, and say they had a good time. Mr. and Mrs. Teel, of Brighton, and Miss Lucy House, of Ensley, were visitors of Mr. and Mrs. George Sorrell Sunday. H. C. Maddox made a business trip to Ensley Saturday. With best wishes to The Union and its many readers, I still am

"PAPA'S PET."

JEMISON.

Dear Editor:

Allow me space in your valuable paper to reply to "Lover of Churches" in last week's issue. He ought to have signed "Respector of Preachers and Churches." My brother Union reader, are you so ignorant that you believe there is only one good preacher and five churches in our county? If so you should not burlesque so and put it in our good paper for education to the young people. Let us not exalt ourselves or man too high, lest we are abased, but keep humble, trusting in God and give Him the honor. You can't be a Christian, but just a visitor to the places you mention. I believe we have got good preachers and churches all over our county. Look at Bro. Beal, of Jemison; Parrish, Union Grove; S. Smitherman, New Salem; R. M. Honyecutt, Providence—too many for me to try to mention. I'm sure S. M. Adams, the strawberry raiser, could even teach you something. I hope to never see another such boastful letter in our good Union. Let us all work and build up The Union. I am sure we are all proud of our good county, its good people and improvements, but let neither church nor community exalt itself, for fear of being debased. Success to The Union. FARM HAND.

BEAT TEN.

Mr. Editor:

Permit me to thank you for the space set apart for this epistle from Beat 10 (the garden spot). As a rule crops are looking fine, health generally good, and no special kick coming, only when the old cows stays in the meadow too late at night. Reckon how we we could remedy that? Mr. Editor, would you like to know how politics are down here? Well, sir! We are killing grass, reading The Union and giving you the credit for standing guard while we make a little bread for our wives and babies. In the meantime we will remember you and your chum, too; you bet we will. That is about the substance of our politics at present, but, however, later we are going to put out a candidate of our own. Would you like to know who he it is? Well, he is one Mr. J. Osmond Middleton, for representative, a man who needs no recommendation, a man who needs no recommendation, a man known the county over for his high culture and integrity. Now as to other candidates, we may put out one for each office in the county, right from the garden spot, and in case we do settle down on one or more, it will be a fox for all the rest. So there will be something-doing when we get our crops laid by. We haven't got any bees between the ceiling of our church, but we are getting honey just the same. Success to The Union. Respectfully, "PAW'S BOY."

MAPLESVILLE ITEMS.

Clyde Martin was so unfortunate as to let a pair of horses get away from him and wrecked a nice new buggy against a telephone pole. Frank Goodgame was in our town today. We hear that Oliver Latham will put up a saw mill in this vicinity. Tom Scott, of Montgomery, has been a visitor of Mrs. Rickett's. Our town was visited by the Salvation Army, and a very large crowd gathered around the Southern Railroad to hear the sermon and singing. Quite a number of our people attended Children's Day at Clanton Ford Sunday. We'll soon have a telephone exchange, with lines going from Montgomery to Centerville. W. W. Lavender, of Center, is in town. Interest in The Union is greatly stimulated since the candidates have commenced to announce. A daughter of Wm. Muir was buried here today. Crops are needing rain very much. Dr. Parnell's fifty-five-foot steel water tower is quite an ornament to the town. Hill Foshee has been quite sick, but is improved now. We are sorry to lose John Gwin, who has accepted the agency at Gurnee, Ala. The Twin Tree Lumber Company is adding a sash gang saw to their plant. Success to The Union. "O."

BETHANY.

Hello! Here I come again without anything much to say; but as "Shorty's Pet" was asking about the mule, will say the mule did not give out on the rider last Sunday, but the rider gave out on the mule. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hill, of Green Springs, visited his mother, Mrs. R. E. Maddox, last week. We are sorry to say that Mrs. D. H. Gentry is on the sick list this week. 'Dolphus Gentry is home on a visit from Tennessee. Miss Mamie Mims has gone to Birmingham to spend the summer, and some of our boys are not all smiles now. Miss Stella, of Bethany, visited Miss Madie Collins, of Cedar Grove, Sunday. With good wishes to The Union and readers,

MISS LOGWOOD.

PLEASANT GROVE.

Dear Editor—It has been quite a while since I had the pleasure of being with you all for a short chat, but if you will open your doors and let me in, I'll chat awhile. We're pleased to see so many nice letters from different parts of the county. I don't think I've ever witnessed such increasing interest as our people are taking in our home paper, the dear old UNION. That's the way; come to the front and let's all hear what you have to say, for we all like to hear from all THE UNION correspondents. Farmers in this section are going right ahead with their work and many are ready to lay off corn and through hoeing cotton. Well, I guess "Rabbit-hunter" can boast on his corn and cotton now, and not his "hay," as the rain has ceased. D. L. Ward and Miss Irena Wright were married last Sunday, June 10, at 3:30 p. m. at the home of the bride's father, J. W. Wright. We all wish the young couple a long and happy life together. Rev J. E. Champion performed the ceremony, after which the happy pair went out riding, accompanied by George W Freeman and Miss Selma Patterson. Marriage being all the talk now, we say, Look out, Judge Reynolds, and be ready to make out more papes; it's catching. With best wishes to THE UNION and its many readers,

GREENHORN.

PACKERS HAVE LOST $20,000,000 IN TRADE

60 Per Cent. of Empoyes Laid Off in Some Plants.

MAKING COSTLY IMPROVEMENTS

Beef Trust Busy Cleaning Slaughter Houses and Canning Rooms--Criticised For Employing Low Grade Labor.

Chicago.—There has been in the last few days a falling off of about one-third in the business of some departments at the stock yards, especially in the canned goods departments and in the sale of questionable meat.

This falling off has resulted in the loss of millions of dollars—some men in close touch with affairs at the yards say the trade has fallen off $20,000,000 within ten days. This loss has fallen most heavily upon the small packing and slaughtering houses in the neighborhood of the yards, where the poorer grades of meat are handled. There also has been a large loss in Fulton Market and in South Water street.

Building inspectors said that in some of the plants sixty per cent. of the employes had been laid off.

The trade in lumpy jaw cattle is practically at a standstill, and those who have been watching the receipts of such cattle at the stock yards say that not more than a dozen animals have been received here during the week.

Building Commissioner Bartzen announced that he would order the packers and the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company to make improvements, the estimated cost of which will be $1,000,000. His notices will demand that the packers let contracts for the improvements within five days.

Sanitary Inspector Hedrick declares that the packers are showing every inclination to meet his suggestions and clean up. The employes in the meat-cutting room of Nelson Morris & Co. are to have clean aprons every day, as a result of one of these suggestions.

It is estimated by a representative of the packers that nearly 5000 visitors a day go through the plants at the stock yards. Among them a few days ago was Robert H. Cowdrey, who was candidate for President of the United States on the Single Tax ticket in 1888. He arraigned the packers for bringing foreigners of a low order of intelligence into the country.

"What do these fellows know about keeping themselves clean?" he asked. "Many of them never saw a towel before."

A story was related to the effect that when cuspidors were provided in the packing houses the laborers shined them up and put them on a shelf for use as drinking cups.

Rumors to the effect that new stock yards, with Sir Thomas Lipton, of London, as chief backer, are to be established near Gary, nd., adjacent to the property of the United States Steel Corporation, were in circulation. Several of the best known real estate men in Chicago were named as among those acquiring land for the purpose.

The report is that at least six of the smaller plants are to be removed from Chicago to Indiana. It is said that the plans include the digging of a canal to the Little Calumet River for the purpose of carrying off disinfected and deodorized refuse. The story is not generally credited.

42,621 YET IN RELIEF CAMPS.

Rations on June 1 Were Supplied to 41,236 Persons in 'Frisco.

San Francisco.—For the information of President E. H. Harriman, of the Southern Pacific, a census has been taken of all the persons still in the refugee camps of this city. It shows that on June 1 13,088 persons were in the permanent camps and 29,533 in the temporary ones. It also shows that on June 1 rations were supplied 41,236 persons and free meal tickets given 9139 persons.

The report cites that there are 2288 persons in the Oakland and Alameda permanent camps, and that on May 31 rations were issued to 10,244 persons in Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley. In Los Angeles there are 600 San Francisco refugees, in Sacramento 120, in Vallejo 313 and in Stockton thirty-six.

Albany, N. Y.—The Court of Appeals affirmed with costs a judgment of $2,262.13 in favor of Anna T. Fargo, of Wyoming County, against the Supreme Tent of the Knights of the Maccabees of the World.

The plaintiff's husband, who held a policy in the organization, committed suicide, and despite the fact that the by-laws say no benefits shall be paid to the survivors of a member who kills himself, whether sane or insane, the lower courts awarded the plaintiff a verdict and the highest court in the State has sustained them.

General Toledo is receiving heavy reinforcements of well-armed men.

CLOUDBURSTS CAUSE RUIN

Damage Mills, Homes and Crops in Conemaugh Valley.

Killed in Vain Effort to Save Her Baby--Hurls Child From Track --Crushed by Engine.

Johnstown, Pa.—Thunder showers, electric storms and heavy downpours of rain that had prevailed throughout Western Pennsylvania during the entire week culminated in cloudbursts in Cambria, Westmoreland, Somerset and Butler counties that caused the rivers and creeks to overflow, flooding the streets in many communities and disseminating a general flood scare. Early reports indicated that the damage would be great. Probably $50,000 will cover all losses sustained in the sections affected.

The greatest damage was in Hooversville, Somerset County, eighteen miles from this city. Here a veritable cloudburst caused Stony Creek to rise seven feet in an hour and a half. The waters reached the first floor of many dwellings, and all the factories in the low lying section of the town were obliged to suspend operations. Cellars were flooded and a number of streets were under water for a time, but no casualties are known to have resulted. The Hooversville schoolhouse was washed away from its foundation.

Island Park, a summer resort, was destroyed by the waters, but as the flood came at an hour when there were no pleasure seekers, the loss is confined to the property of the park management. The entire loss in this section is estimated at $25,000.

The Conemaugh River, made famous in the history of the Johnstown flood of 1889, swollen by the outpouring from the Stony Creek section, began to rise rapidly and caused somewhat of a scare in this city. The streets along the river bank were soon inundated and mills and factories were obliged to suspend.

Heroine of an instant's tragedy, Mrs. Annie Roblitzki made a marvelous effort to save her child from death, but although she prevented the infant from being crushed under an engine that ground her to pieces, the little one was killed by the force with which she flung it from her, and its body a moment after was engulfed in flood-swollen Stony Creek.

The woman was close to the middle of the famous stone bridge over that stream, watching wreckage from a flood that did much damage in Hooversville, Butler, Latrobe, Baggaley and other places, when a Pennsylvania flyer thundered over the structure. Husband and friends called to her to flee, but the roar of the rushing waters evidently drowned their voices as well as the noise of the approaching train, and the vibration of the track must have been her first warning.

She faced the express only in time to see she hadn't a chance to escape. One cry broke from her. Then, raising her baby, six months old, high above her head, she hurled it from her. Her scream was swallowed in a shrill blast of the whistle as the engine cut her down. Roblitzki tried to dash toward the spot, where he, too, surely would have met death, but friends restrained him.

At Latrobe, Westmoreland County, the streets were flooded and merchants were obliged to remove their stocks.

Baggaley, a mining village in a gully near Nine-Mile Run, was for a time in a perilous position. So rapidly did the water rise that many people were taken from their houses on rafts.

REBELS DEFEATED.

Invaders From Salvador Routed by Guatemalan Troops.

Washington, D. C.—The Guatemalan Minister here received a cablegram from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Barrios, stating that the revolutionary movement across the Salvador boundary had met with utter defeat.

According to the cablegram the Guatemalan troops met the revolutionary party as Asuncion Mita and defeated them completely.

The Government forces, the cablegram says, have been triumphant all along the line and have not met the slightest reverses anywhere.

PRESIDENT STOPS WRITING.

No More Magazine Articles Until He Leaves the White House.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Trident, a publication for Kansas City High School pupils, has obtained an announcement from the White House that the President "hereafter will not write for publication during his incumbency of his present office, except on matters of public business and in an official way."

The statement is made in a letter from Secretary Loeb in reply to a request for a contribution from Mr. Roosevelt.

MILITIA IN GOVERNOR'S HOUSE.

Ignore Protest of Commander-in-Chief and Catch a Shirker.

Jackson, Miss.—The Governor's mansion, brilliantly illuminated in honor of a reception tendered by Miss Vardaman to her guests, was invaded by the provost guard of the State militia in search of a young man who was evading drill duty. The truant was found hiding upstairs and dragged down the stairway and through the hall, causing consternation among the guests.

Governor and Mrs. Vardaman both protested against the search, but to no avail.

UNION GROVE.

Baseball playing is all the go now. Last Friday some of our boys assisted Clanton on to victory over Clanton. The game was played on Waddy's ground. Mahan, Waddy's twirler, was taken out of the box the first inning and Downing took his place, but he too went up in the air. He has a good curve, plenty of speed, but had no control. It looked like Clanton's game with seven runs, but Kilgore goes in the pitch and held Clanton under his control for three innings, and then Mahan took hold and finished the game. When the dust had cleared away it was found that the score stood: Waddy 9, Clanton, 10. The feature of the game was Downing and Conway catching the second baseman of Clanton trying to steal home. Union Grove baseball club will go to Providence this coming Saturday afternoon to play that team. As this is the first meeting of the two teams we are looking for a good game. Downing and Martin will be in the firing line for Union Grove. If you want to get the news "take The Union;" if you want advertisements "take the Banner." Success to The Union and its readers.

"BIG NO. 10."

WYLAM.

It is beginning to feel like summer here. Protracted meeting still going and drawing large crowds, especially at night. Dr. Miller, of Tipton, Ga., has had to go home, leaving Rev. H. C. Brabham to close the meeting. We were sorry to lose Dr. Miller, for he sure did touch up the sinners and made the professing Christians open their eyes and find themselves not doing their duty. Mr. J. L. Cauley and family spent Sunday in North Birmingham, and say they had a good time. Mr. and Mrs. Teel, of Brighton, and Miss Lucy House, of Ensley, were visitors of Mr. and Mrs. George Sorrell Sunday. H. C. Maddox made a business trip to Ensley Saturday. With best wishes to The Union and its many readers, I still am

"PAPA'S PET."

JEMISON.

Dear Editor:

Allow me space in your valuable paper to reply to "Lover of Churches" in last week's issue. He ought to have signed "Respector of Preachers and Churches." My brother Union reader, are you so ignorant that you believe there is only one good preacher and five churches in our county? If so you should not burlesque so and put it in our good paper for education to the young people. Let us not exalt ourselves or man too high, lest we are abased, but keep humble, trusting in God and give Him the honor. You can't be a Christian, but just a visitor to the places you mention. I believe we have got good preachers and churches all over our county. Look at Bro. Beal, of Jemison; Parrish, Union Grove; S. Smitherman, New Salem; R. M. Honyecutt, Providence—too many for me to try to mention. I'm sure S. M. Adams, the strawberry raiser, could even teach you something. I hope to never see another such boastful letter in our good Union. Let us all work and build up The Union. I am sure we are all proud of our good county, its good people and improvements, but let neither church nor community exalt itself, for fear of being debased. Success to The Union. FARM HAND.

BEAT TEN.

Mr. Editor:

Permit me to thank you for the space set apart for this epistle from Beat 10 (the garden spot). As a rule crops are looking fine, health generally good, and no special kick coming, only when the old cows stays in the meadow too late at night. Reckon how we we could remedy that? Mr. Editor, would you like to know how politics are down here? Well, sir! We are killing grass, reading The Union and giving you the credit for standing guard while we make a little bread for our wives and babies. In the meantime we will remember you and your chum, too; you bet we will. That is about the substance of our politics at present, but, however, later we are going to put out a candidate of our own. Would you like to know who he it is? Well, he is one Mr. J. Osmond Middleton, for representative, a man who needs no recommendation, a man who needs no recommendation, a man known the county over for his high culture and integrity. Now as to other candidates, we may put out one for each office in the county, right from the garden spot, and in case we do settle down on one or more, it will be a fox for all the rest. So there will be something doing when we get our crops laid by. We haven't got any bees between the ceiling of our church, but we are getting honey just the same. Success to The Union. Respectfully, "PAW'S BOY."

MAPLESVILLE ITEMS.

Clyde Martin was so unfortunate as to let a pair of horses get away from him and wrecked a nice new buggy against a telephone pole. Frank Goodgame was in our town today. We hear that Oliver Latham will put up a saw mill in this vicinity. Tom Scott, of Montgomery, has been a visitor of Mrs. Rickett's. Our town was visited by the Salvation Army, and a very large crowd gathered around the Southern Railroad to hear the sermon and singing. Quite a number of our people attended Children's Day at Clanton Ford Sunday. We'll soon have a telephone exchange, with lines going from Montgomery to Centerville. W. W. Lavender, of Center, is in town. Interest in The Union is greatly stimulated since the candidates have commenced to announce. A daughter of Wm. Muir was buried here today. Crops are needing rain very much. Dr. Parnell's fifty-five-foot steel water tower is quite an ornament to the town. Hill Foshee has been quite sick, but is improved now. We are sorry to lose John Gwin, who has accepted the agency at Gurnee, Ala. The Twin Tree Lumber Company is adding a sash gang saw to their plant. Success to The Union. "O."

BETHANY.

Hello! Here I come again without anything much to say; but as "Shorty's Pet" was asking about the mule, will say the mule did not give out on the rider last Sunday, but the rider gave out on the mule. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hill, of Green Springs, visited his mother, Mrs. R. E. Maddox, last week. We are sorry to say that Mrs. D. H. Gentry is on the sick list this week. 'Dolphus Gentry is home on a visit from Tennessee. Miss Mamie Mims has gone to Birmingham to spend the summer, and some of our boys are not all smiles now. Miss Stella, of Bethany, visited Miss Madie Collins, of Cedar Grove, Sunday. With good wishes to The Union and readers,

MISS LOGWOOD.

PLEASANT GROVE.

Dear Editor—It has been quite a while since I had the pleasure of being with you all for a short chat, but if you will open your doors and let me in, I'll chat awhile. We're pleased to see so many nice letters from different parts of the county. I don't think I've ever witnessed such increasing interest as our people are taking in our home paper, the dear old UNION. That's the way; come to the front and let's all hear what you have to say, for we all like to hear from all THE UNION correspondents. Farmers in this section are going right ahead with their work and many are ready to lay off corn and through hoeing cotton. Well, I guess "Rabbit-hunter" can boast on his corn and cotton now, and not his "nay," as the rain has ceased. D. L. Ward and Miss Irena Wright were married last Sunday, June 10, at 3:30 p. m. at the home of the bride's father, J. W. Wright. We all wish the young couple a long and happy life together. Rev J. E. Champion performed the ceremony, after which the happy pair went out riding, accompanied by George W Freeman and Miss Selma Patterson. Marriage being all the talk now, we say, Look out, Judge Reynolds, and be ready to make out more papes; it's catching. With best wishes to THE UNION and its many readers,

GREENHORN.

PACKERS HAVE LOST $20,000,000 IN TRADE

60 Per Cent. of Empoyes Laid Off in Some Plants.

MAKING COSTLY IMPROVEMENTS

Beef Trust Busy Cleaning Slaughter Houses and Canning Rooms--Criticised For Employing Low Grade Labor.

Chicago.—There has been in the last few days a falling off of about one-third in the business of some departments at the stock yards, especially in the canned goods departments and in the sale of questionable meat.

This falling off has resulted in the loss of millions of dollars—some men in close touch with affairs at the yards say the trade has fallen off $20,000,000 within ten days. This loss has fallen most heavily upon the small packing and slaughtering houses in the neighborhood of the yards, where the poorer grades of meat are handled. There also has been a large loss in Fulton Market and in South Water street.

Building inspectors said that in some of the plants sixty per cent. of the employes had been laid off.

The trade in lumpy jaw cattle is practically at a standstill, and those who have been watching the receipts of such cattle at the stock yards say that not more than a dozen animals have been received here during the week.

Building Commissioner Bartzen announced that he would order the packers and the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company to make improvements, the estimated cost of which will be $1,000,000. His notices will demand that the packers let contracts for the improvements within five days.

Sanitary Inspector Hedrick declares that the packers are showing every inclination to meet his suggestions and clean up. The employes in the meat-cutting room of Nelson Morris & Co. are to have clean aprons every day, as a result of one of these suggestions.

It is estimated by a representative of the packers that nearly 5000 visitors a day go through the plants at the stock yards. Among them a few days ago was Robert H. Cowdrey, who was candidate for President of the United States on the Single Tax ticket in 1888. He arraigned the packers for bringing foreigners of a low order of intelligence into the country.

"What do these fellows know about keeping themselves clean?" he asked. "Many of them never saw a towel before."

A story was related to the effect that when cuspidors were provided in the packing houses the laborers shined them up and put them on a shelf for use as drinking cups.

Rumors to the effect that new stock yards, with Sir Thomas Lipton, of London, as chief backer, are to be established near Gary, nd., adjacent to the property of the United States Steel Corporation, were in circulation. Several of the best known real estate men in Chicago were named as among those acquiring land for the purpose.

The report is that at least six of the smaller plants are to be removed from Chicago to Indiana. It is said that the plans include the digging of a canal to the Little Calumet River for the purpose of carrying off disinfected and deodorized refuse. The story is not generally credited.

42,621 YET IN RELIEF CAMPS.

Rations on June 1 Were Supplied to 41,236 Persons in 'Frisco.

San Francisco.—For the information of President E. H. Harriman, of the Southern Pacific, a census has been taken of all the persons still in the refugee camps of this city. It shows that on June 1 13,088 persons were in the permanent camps and 29,533 in the temporary ones. It also shows that on June 1 rations were supplied 41,236 persons and free meal tickets given 9139 persons.

The report cites that there are 2288 persons in the Oakland and Alameda permanent camps, and that on May 31 rations were issued to 10,244 persons in Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley. In Los Angeles there are 600 San Francisco refugees, in Sacramento 120, in Vallejo 313 and in Stockton thirty-six.

SUICIDE CAN'T STOP BENEFITS.

Court Orders Maccabees to Pay Widow of Self-Slain Man.

Albany, N. Y.—The Court of Appeals affirmed with costs a judgment of $2,262.13 in favor of Anna T. Fargo, of Wyoming County, against the Supreme Tent of the Knights of the Maccabees of the World.

The plaintiff's husband, who held a policy in the organization, committed suicide, and despite the fact that the by-laws say no benefits shall be paid to the survivors of a member who kills himself, whether sane or insane, the lower courts awarded the plaintiff a verdict and the highest court in the State has sustained them.

GUATEMALA REBEL VICTORIES.

Government Troops Twice Beaten—Insurgents Reinforced.

City of Mexico.—General Toledo, in command of the revolutionary troops in Southern Guatemala, has won two engagements. The Government forces have been driven back.

General Toledo is receiving heavy reinforcements of well-armed men.

CLOUDBURSTS CAUSE RUIN

Damage Mills, Homes and Crops in Conemaugh Valley.

Killed in Vain Effort to Save Her Baby--Hurls Child From Track --Crushed by Engine.

Johnstown, Pa.—Thunder showers, electric storms and heavy downpours of rain that had prevailed throughout Western Pennsylvania during the entire week culminated in cloudbursts in Cambria, Westmoreland, Somerset and Butler counties that caused the rivers and creeks to overflow, flooding the streets in many communities and disseminating a general flood scare. Early reports indicated that the damage would be great. Probably $50,000 will cover all losses sustained in the sections affected.

The greatest damage was in Hooversville, Somerset County, eighteen miles from this city. Here a veritable cloudburst caused Stony Creek to rise seven feet in an hour and a half. The waters reached the first floor of many dwellings, and all the factories in the low lying section of the town were obliged to suspend operations. Cellars were flooded and a number of streets were under water for a time, but no casualties are known to have resulted. The Hooversville schoolhouse was washed away from its foundation.

Island Park, a summer resort, was destroyed by the waters, but as the flood came at an hour when there were no pleasure seekers, the loss is confined to the property of the park management. The entire loss in this section is estimated at $25,000.

The Conemaugh River, made famous in the history of the Johnstown flood of 1889, swollen by the outpouring from the Stony Creek section, began to rise rapidly and caused somewhat of a scare in this city. The streets along the river bank were soon inundated and mills and factories were obliged to suspend.

Heroine of an instant's tragedy, Mrs. Annie Roblitzki made a marvelous effort to save her child from death, but although she prevented the infant from being crushed under an engine that ground her to pieces, the little one was killed by the force with which she flung it from her, and its body a moment after was engulfed in flood-swollen Stony Creek.

The woman was close to the middle of the famous stone bridge over that stream, watching wreckage from a flood that did much damage in Hooversville, Butler, Latrobe, Baggaley and other places, when a Pennsylvania flyer thundered over the structure. Husband and friends called to her to flee, but the roar of the rushing waters evidently drowned their voices as well as the noise of the approaching train, and the vibration of the track must have been her first warning.

She faced the express only in time to see she hadn't a chance to escape. One cry broke from her. Then, raising her baby, six months old, high above her head, she hurled it from her. Her scream was swallowed in a shrill blast of the whistle as the engine cut her down. Roblitzki tried to dash toward the spot, where he, too, surely would have met death, but friends restrained him.

At Latrobe, Westmoreland County, the streets were flooded and merchants were obliged to remove their stocks.

Baggaley, a mining village in a gully near Nine-Mile Run, was for a time in a perilous position. So rapidly did the water rise that many people were taken from their houses on rafts.

REBELS DEFEATED.

Invaders From Salvador Routed by Guatemalan Troops.

Washington, D. C.—The Guatemalan Minister here received a cablegram from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Barrios, stating that the revolutionary movement across the Salvador boundary had met with utter defeat.

According to the cablegram the Guatemalan troops met the revolutionary party as Asuncion Mita and defeated them completely.

The Government forces, the cablegram says, have been triumphant all along the line and have not met the slightest reverses anywhere.

PRESIDENT STOPS WRITING.

No More Magazine Articles Until He Leaves the White House.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Trident, a publication for Kansas City High School pupils, has obtained an announcement from the White House that the President "hereafter will not write for publication during his incumbency of his present office, except on matters of public business and in an official way."

The statement is made in a letter from Secretary Loeb in reply to a request for a contribution from Mr. Roosevelt.

MILITIA IN GOVERNOR'S HOUSE.

Ignore Protest of Commander-in-Chief and Catch a Shirker.

Jackson, Miss.—The Governor's mansion, brilliantly illuminated in honor of a reception tendered by Miss Vardaman to her guests, was invaded by the provost guard of the State militia in search of a young man who was evading drill duty. The truant was found hiding upstairs and dragged down the stairway and through the hall, causing consternation among the guests.

Governor and Mrs. Vardaman both protested against the search, but to no avail.

In wearing silk early in the day one must be particularly careful that it is as smart as it is simple. Trimmings must be either absent or unobtrusive, as any elaboration on this sort of dress makes for dowdiness.

INEXPENSIVE AND PRETTY FROCKS.

It is the woman with limited means who first discovered what pretty frocks could be made from 25-cent dimities and lawns. A nobby ribbon girdle, perhaps, a bit of velvet so attached that it can be removed when the frock goes to the laundry, possibly revers and gauntlet cuffs of taffeta—some touch that will give it character and style and distinguish it from its multitude of neighbors and you have at small expense a dainty dress that can be washed and washed and always be neat and natty.

PROVING FASHION NOT FEMININE.

"Fashion is surely not of the feminine gender," said a girl yesterday, as she contemplated a spring hat trimmed with a bunch of gladioli which, though a perfect imitation of the garden variety, were fastened bolt upright at one side of its pointed crown, as if standing in a vase. "If fashion were feminine she wouldn't love the ludicrous so dearly," the girl went on. "There never was a time when woman's headgear was not capable of exciting ridicule in some of its phases. Men who say that woman may be witty, but cannot be humorous, and that the sense of the ridiculous is not in her, have only to point to some of the startling spring hats to prove their theory."

WHERE THE GARMENTS ARE MADE.

Social workers report that Italian and other foreign women form the majority of buttonhole makers and that they are as a rule a much oppressed class of women. They are not organized to any extent. A merchant turns over his suits, coats, etc. to contractors, whose only thought is to get them made as cheaply as possible. Ofter garments are made under good conditions, only to be turned over to the tenements to be finished, have the buttonholes made in them, etc. Garments that come out of veritable pesthole are worn by fastidious uptown people, who would turn in horror from the places where their garments have been.

WOMEN WHO SPOIL SPORT.

It is a fact to be deplored, says Madame, that in a pastime so alluring as that of flirtation there should be so many women who cheapen themselves. In all things in life it is important, so to speak, to keep up the standard, and most emphatically this is the case where men are concerned. Women who cheapen themselves are minxes pure and simple, for they spoil sport. They are the worst enemies of their sex; their ruin men by making them unduly vain.

ECLIPSING GIRLHOOD.

Fashion is setting in strongly to reverse what has hitherto been "the ordinary rule" of relative age in marriage — namely, that the husband should be older than the wife. Now one continually hears of marriages in which the lady is the senior, says Vanity Fair. The charm of the older and experienced woman entirely eclipses the crudities of girlhood.

FASHION NOTES.

The small pockets which ornament the front of the plain shirt waists this season are narrow and high, which gives them a charming feminine touch and differentiates them from the men's shirts of which they are supposed to be an exact imitation.

Not all wedding gowns are made en princess, but many of the handsomest of them are in this new and graceful style.

Forget-me-nots are a dainty design for French embroidery. Being small, the padding raises them well and the rounded petals and leaves are very effective combined with their thread-like stems.

A line of light green follows the edge of a black Eton, upon it is laid black braid, overlapping a little, and a handsome braid ornament is appliqued on each front of the bolero and upon each cuff. This is a very neat little coat.

Roses of several harmonizing shades of old pink and red form a rosette at the side of the hat which is worn with an all-gray costume. The hat itself is gray, as is its trimming of ribbon and quill, the only bit of contrasting color appearing in the roses.

One girl who failed to find just the design to please her for a circular blouse yoke improvised one from the brim of a lingerie hat with the most effective results.

Men's four-in-hand ties are developed in the most beautiful shades of lilac, Alice blue, raspberry red, etc., but most men prefer solid dark colors, which are on the whole, no doubt, more masculine and appropriate.

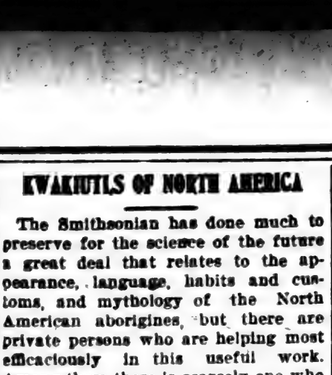
A veat and skirt panel of lace ruffles are a feature of a handsome graduation gown of batiste mull. Both vest and panel taper towards the waist, broadening above and below, thus giving the waist a trim look.

No woman should make the mistake of wearing a short-backed corset with a princess gown. The beauty of the princess style is its graceful unbroken lines and when these are interrupted by under garments that bulge out here and there the effect is hideous. There is no style which leaves bare deformity of figure and carelessness as to the shape of one's lingerie like the lovely princess.

KWAKIUTLS OF NORTH AMERICA

The Smithsonian has done much to preserve for the science of the future a great deal that relates to the appearance, language, habits and customs, and mythology of the North American aborigines, but there are private persons who are helping most efficaciously in this useful work. Among them there is scarcely one who deserves more consideration for what he has accomplished and is in process of effecting than Morris K. Jesup.

The tribes on the northwest coast studied by Boas and Hunt are apt to be thickset, broad-faced people, rather long-bodied, and sometimes bearded. They are divided up into (1) Tlingits of Southern Alaska, (2) Haidas of Queen Charlotte Islands, (3) Tsimshian of the Nass and Skoena Rivers, (4) Wakashan of Vancouver's Island and the mainland near by, and (5) Salishan of Southern Vancouver's Island and the coast down to Washington and eastward into Idaho and Montana. The Kwatiutls fall under group 4, or Wakashan, and belong chiefly between Rivers Inlet and Cape Mudge, B. C.



KWAKIUTL WOMAN AND MAN.

The Kwakiutls are a tribe of light-colored Indians whose faces and expression readily recall those of the lower class Japanese and Koreans across the Pacific. They differ from other coast Indians by having very high-bridged, often hooked, noses, and very long faces. The shape of their heads is artificial. Like our own Flatheads and some tribes in Mexico and South America, they deform the head in infancy, so that the upper forhead, which we consider a sign of intellect, is depressed perhaps in order to obtain an approach to the skull of a beast or bird.

The heads of a man and woman of this tribe exhibit the results of early training of the bones of the head. Whether it occasions pain to the child or not, there is a general agreement that it has no effect upon the intelligence of the people to whom it is applied. They are much more intelligent than the passing traveler would imagine. The investigator who comes among them with some knowledge of their beliefs and rites obtains their confidence and finds them, if not remarkable specimens of intelligence, still by no means lacking in wits. In his publications for the Smithsonian and the Museum of Natural History Dr. Boas opens up a very extraordinary glimpse into their manners and customs. Among these are the potlatch feasts given by chiefs to uphold their authority, in which they distribute largess in a very mediaeval fashion, consisting of blankets and big copper tokens which have a fictitious but relatively enormous value, the object of the largess being to prove by their princely generosity that they are both richer and more lavish than some rival chief.

KWAKIUTL WOMAN.
(Full-face.)

Another and often very disgusting ceremony is the initiation of a new member into a cannibal society. The novice returns emaciated and in a state of frantic ecstasy from the woods, bringing pieces of old corpses, skulls, or bones, which he chews in order to strike awe into the hearts of the spectators. He enters the lodge by the hole in the top or some other unexpected way, after the whistles of his fellow-cannibals and his own shrill cries have been heard without for some time, and he indulges in the pleasant pastime of biting people. Such practices readily recall the loathsome messes which have always formed part of the witch and wizard outfit in Europe down to the present century, like the objects that go to make the hell-broth of the witches in "Macbeth." The purpose seems to be the same, namely, to frighten the unsophisticated by showing a daring in the handling of disgusting objects which proves the superiority of the professional and the power of his or her guardian spirits to protect the shaman or medicine man from what would be injurious to the ordinary person.

In former times the Indians of the Northwest coast lived in underground houses called kickulie houses, which emerged only like a mound from the surface of the ground, following a fashion that existed in Great Britain and Ireland down to the tenth century, and is known to have obtained in Northern Europe and Siberia. Such dwellings are described by Herodotus and were found in the early part of the present century within what is now Russian territory. The illustration shows one of these old kickulies near Spence's Bridge, British Columbia. The bough, bark and turf covering of the roof has fallen away in places, showing the rafters with cross pieces tied to them. Another picture shows one of the main posts of a house belonging to Bella Coola Indians at Bella Bella, B. C., with demon or totem masks carved on it, and one end of a native boat. Sometimes all the posts within a house are decorated in this substantial fashion. It can hardly be maintained that tribes which are so clever at boatbuilding, mask carving, and the production of totem poles are devoid of brains. They have four or five different kinds of boats for different purposes, and their houses are quite as elaborate as those of the oldest inhabitants of Japan, the so-called "hairy" Ainos of the north.

Fort Saratoga.

With the history of old Saratoga, the names of Schuyler and Livingston are closely associated. Fort Saratoga was built in 1690 by Major Peter Philip Schuyler, and around it grew up a small settlement which suffered many vicissitudes during the troublous times of the next hundred years. Lying on the thoroughfare from Canada to New York, this northern valley of the Hudson was always in dispute in the French and Indian War, and in the Revolution until the great battle of Saratoga—the first victory over which the American flag waved, and one of the fifteen decisive battles of the world. The actual battle ground is several miles away from the settlement, and is marked to-day by many stones recording the brave deeds of our American soldiers. The house still stands in which Arnold was confined as prisoner, and from he escaped in time to help turn the tide of battle toward victory.—Four-Track News.

ORCHARD and GARDEN

THE COW PEA CROP.

Much has been written in praise of the cow pea as a renovator of the soil and also as a profitable forage crop. There is no doubt that it can be made to pay and often it may be the most economical crop that can be grown considering its value both as a forage and a fertilizing crop, but many farmers who have not had experience with the cow pea get the notion that it does not need fertilizer of any kind applied, no matter how poor the soil on which it is to be grown. While the cow pea is a legume and has the power of drawing upon the air for its nitrogen, still it must depend upon the soil for potash, phosphoric acid and other mineral foods and if the soil does not contain these elements in sufficient quantities to grow a good crop the cow pea crop will be limited to the capacity of the soil to furnish mineral plant food.

Then in some cases the seed or the soil will need treatment with the proper bacteria—"Inoculated" the scientists term it. I have never had any trouble in getting the nodules to develop on the cow pea roots, however, without inoculating with bacteria. Last year I sowed my cow peas broadcast June 6th on a well prepared soil and harrowed the seed in. A part of the land was rather dry clay soil that was inclined to bake. The season was very wet and the peas came on rapidly, especially on the lower ground. A few grains of corn had scattered in the seed and the peas vined to the top of the corn. They vined more than I ever knew this variety of peas to before and when they began to bloom the pea vines stood up a perfect mat of vines waist high.

The wet weather continued and they fell down and many of the vines rotted before the pea pods began to ripen. I tried to cut them with the scythe but this was a slow, laborious job. The mowing machine was tried, but we could not cut them with the mower, as a greater part of the peas were left in the field. Many of them were spoiled before cutting time. The large black cow-pea was the variety grown. I have tried cow peas both as a cow feed and a horse feed and they have proved a very satisfactory furnisher of protein. Horses will not eat them much at first but will soon learn to eat them.—A. J. Legg, in the Economist.

FARM NOTES.

You might as well kill your chicks at the outset as to expect them to do well without pure water and plenty of it.

Poultry will keep healthier if a little salt is added to their food, the same as for all animals.

A force pump throwing a spray is good in throwing whitewash and other lice killing liquid into the cracks and crevices of the poultry quarters.

A lump of stone lime will greatly assist in drying the poultry house by absorbing moisture. The floor should always be well covered with leaves or cut straw.

Kaffir corn is good for little chicks as well as for older fowls. The grain is smaller than wheat.

Dissolved bones, phosphoric guano and potash, applied to arable lands, disappeared at the rate of six-tenths the first year, three-teaths the second and one-tenth the third.

The potato beetle has twenty-five parasite enemies, yet notwithstanding these and all the poisons, it defies annihilation.

Angora goats are used for clearing of underbrush from lands that could not easily be cleared without their aid. They prefer the bark of twigs of small trees and brush to the best grasses.

The white-leaved and weeping lindens are regarded as excellent trees for lawns in a northern climate, as they are hardy, grow rapidly and are free from insect attacks compared with many kinds of trees.

Air must get at most seeds if they are to germinate.

Weeds in the garden can be kept down by mulching.

Do not plow the ground when it turns up in wet lumps.

Grass is a great money-maker on the northern farm.

Wet ground dries out better if unplowed than plowed.

Use up the old straw before beginning on the new. Cut it up fine with a fodder cutter, make bedding of it and when it is added to the manure heap it will decompose easily and also assist in absorbing liquids.

Each particular field requires special treatment. One plot of land may be better adapted for a certain crop than another and the farmer must study the requirements of each field and crop.

SALT IN CHEESEMAKING.

A cheesemaker of large experience says that without salt cheese would have little taste—it would be flat, but salt has a relation to cheesemaking other than the direct taste it imparts to it, for it considerably affects the curing properties of cheese by expelling much of the moisture, thus checking fermentations. Without salt, cheese would cure very quickly, much more so, in fact, than is desired.

While it is necessary to get enough salt in cheese, too much is even worse, as it takes out too much moisture, thereby reducing the yield and leaving a dry, mealy and slow curing cheese. A slow curing cheese is often desirable—in fact the best cheese is the slow cured cheese, but this should be brought about rather by low temperature than by excessive salting.

Too much salt causes the flavor to be injured, although when bad flavored milk is received it is advisable to salt more heavily.

The salting of cheese must be watched carefully—no certain quantity can be used every day, but the quantity must be varied according to the condition of the curd. Other things to be considered in salting cheese are the proper distribution of the salt, keeping the curd well stirred up while the salt is being applied and having the curd at the proper temperature.

TWO DAIRYING DELUSIONS.

The objection has been made that if all cows were brought up to a high standard of production it would bring down the price of the products, said W. D. Hoard of Wisconsin at the late Illinois State Farmers Institute. Keeping poor, unfit cows for the purpose of holding up prices of butter and milk is hard on the constitution. The surplus of dairy products comes from cows that bring no profit to their owners. Eliminate the poor cows and there will be no surplus. Too many farmers keep their eyes on the market. They cannot affect the price one dot or tittle. They can if they will reduce the cost of production. Lots of money is to be made by a wiser administration of the farm end of the business. This is the only end that is wholly within our control. Right here reigns supreme the man behind the cow.

TO CONTROL VICIOUS HORSES.

Some horses are mean about wanting to run away, and it is sometimes hard to stop them, but I have a way that you can hold them. Just put the snap of the main line, on the near horse, through the left bridle ring and snap it into the opposite ring and the check coming from the other horse, put the snap through the right ring and snap it into the other ring with the buckle side toward the jaw so that when you pull back on the lines he will stop because it hurts his jaw. We did this with a mule and it works fine. I also knew of another man who had a mule that he could not work and he fixed the lines this way and he could work the mule in less than a day. Just try it.—Walter E. Reed, of Madison, Ind.

GOOD ONIONS.

The Red Wethers field onion is one of the best early hardy varieties; the Yellow Strassburg, the Yellow Globe Danvers and the Southport Yellow Globe are popular varieties either for home use or for market. The skin is a bright yellow medium size, make quick growth, have small necks and of mild flavor. These varieties are grown very largely to gather when half grown to bunch for market and for early summer sales as dry onions. The white silver skin, the white pearl and the white green are mostly grown for family use and for selling to the pickling houses. These varieties are half hardy and should not be planted before the ground is dry and warm. The Australian Yellow and Brown Globe are new varieties of extra merit; the bulbs are globe shaped, with a light brown skin, solid, heavy, and of mild flavor and good keeper.

COLLAR AND SADDLE GALLS.

Galls on horses are due to several causes, but frequently to saddles and harness that press unevenly on the body. The collar should fit the horse perfectly, and it cannot be too good. A loose girth to a saddle may allow it to shift. When a gall is noticed there is something wrong with the saddle or harness, and no remedy will be available until the cause of the gall is removed. An examination of the harness should be made whenever the horse is brought up from work at night, and it should be kept in good condition or the horse will suffer.

IT PAYS TO CAPONIZE.

A gain of four pounds per head in weight and of ten cents per pound in price is quite worth while when you remember that it can be done on about the same amount of feed. It is wise to caponize every cockerel not wanted for breeding. There is very little pain caused by the operation if done skilfully and at the right time—less pain than is often endured by cockerels in their fights with one another. But the writer will never forget the cold chills it caused him to witness the bungling attempts of some of the pupils at a poultry school. It is rank cruelty to practice such an operation without first working on dead birds.

RAISING SWEET POTATOES.

Prepare the ground, which should be a well fertilized sandy loam, thoroughly and throw it up into ridges as far apart as ordinary corn rows. Set the plants 18 inches apart in the center of these ridges, pressing the soil firmly about the roots. Pour a cupful of water around each plant and as soon as it sinks into the soil cover the spot with dry dirt to prevent evaporation. Run the cultivator through between the rows once before the vines commence to run, then mulch heavily and no more work is required until digging time.—C. B. Barrett, Thurman, Kan.

Millions of Bananas.

The importation of bananas into England during the first three months of 1906 amounted to 1,182,000 bunches, an increase of 303,263 compared with the same period last year. This increase was almost wholly from the West Indies.

FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

The friends of M. A. KILLGORE hereby announce him as a candidate for representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, subject to the action of the People's primary election

NEW CANDIDATES.

The announcement of F. J. Fitts for sheriff will not be a surprise to our people, as many have been expecting it. We have laid down the rule for ourselves to say little about the candidates for the county officers, preferring to let them go before the primary for the people's verdict, unbiased by anything we say. Read Mr. Fitts' letter to voters. He is about 36 years old and during the years we have known him he has been noted for his firm and outspoken adherence to the people's cause in our county.

Mr. D. H. Gentry has also announced as a candidate for the office of sheriff, and addresses a letter "To the people" in this issue defining his stand and claims. Read it and judge for yourselves. THE UNION has not got any candidate; we are neutral ground and will give a "square deal to all." We are sure of one thing only: the nominee of our primary will be the next sheriff of Chilton county.

LETTER FROM F. J. FITTS.

Maplesville, Ala., June 12, 1906.

To the Voters of Chilton County:

In this issue of The Union will be found my announcement for sheriff of Chilton county, subject to the action of the People's primary.

I expect to make an active canvass of the county before the primary is held, and I shall endeavor to see as many of the voters as it is practical for me to do—especially those who have pledged their allegiance to the People's cause, the cause of right and justice.

It is hardly necessary here for me to state what my political convictions are. They are proven by my works in the past. The first ballot I ever cast was for the nominee of the People's party, and the first political work I ever did was rendered in behalf of the People's party. I have never deviated from this course nor receded from the position originally taken. I have never deserted the cause of the people nor battled against it in the ranks of the enemy. When dark clouds were hovering around us and defeat seemed to be staring us in the face, I was found at my post of duty, battling for the principles of the People's party. I have been honored by the people with many offices of trust and honor, and I have never betrayed a trust reposed in me. I have been honored by the people with the highest office in the gift of the people of my county, and I have never betrayed a trust reposed in me. I have been honored by electing some whom we had honored by electing them to office, my faith in the righteousness of our cause remained undiminished, and I have ever been steadfast in defending the interests of the people.

With a straight record for party loyalty behind me, and an honest purpose in view, it is with some measure of hope that I submit my claims to the determination of the people. If I am your nominee my heart will go out to you in deepest gratitude; if some other candidate receives the honor and by your votes you declare him your nominee, he shall have my unqualified support, and I pledge him my very best efforts to elect him by an overwhelming majority.

Respectfully,
tf F. J. FITTS.

TO THE PEOPLE OF CHILTON CO.

With due respect to all, I hereby announce myself as a candidate for sheriff of Chilton county, subject to the action of the Republican and Populist primary, and I will say that I have helped to elect every ticket that has ever been elected in Chilton county, since I have been old enough to vote. I am in my forty-ninth year, therefore I feel that I am entitled to ask my people for their support. And I will appreciate anything that they will do for me, and I will promise that if I am the choice of the people I will perform the duties of the office so that the people will not feel ashamed of me. But if I a mnot the choice of the people, I am here to help elect the man that is their choice. Let me say in closing that I have always supported the People's ticket in the county straight, and have never wavered in my devotion to our organization. So with best wishes to all and success to THE UNION and its many readers
Respectfully, D. H. GENTRY.

M. A. KILLGORE.

Friends of Mr. Killgore have put him before the people for the office of representative from Chilton county in this week's UNION, saying: "Mr. Killgore persisted against his name being announced for some time, but after being solicited by some of his good friends he consented to it by several of his near neighbors endorsing him, but said he did not propose to enter into any struggle for any office before the primary, but if the people saw fit to confer the honor upon him he would serve the people to the best of his ability. This seems to be the office seeking the man."

We can add nothing to the above. Our people all known Mr. Killgore (if not personally, at least by hearsay), and now it is up to them to decide.

ENDORSING GOODGAME.

Clanton, June 12, 1906.

Editor Union:

Please give me space in your paper to say a few words. I want to say that I endorse every word "Hill Billy" said about J. F. Goodgame. I have known him all my life. He has done more for the Republican and Populist party in Chilton county than any man, and this is the first he has asked the people for any office. Now, as he has done so much for us, let us elect him Sheriff. He will carry Beat 4 by a big majority. Yours for the People's ticket,
OLD CITIZEN.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION AT UNION GROVE.

The Sunday school convention of the Jemison district, beats, 1 and 2 was held at Union Grove Sunday, May 27, 1906. The president, Mr. W. U. Shaw, presided, and the secretary being absent, Mr. C. C. Conway was appointed to serve for the day. The prayer service was led by Rev. J. M. Parrish and the devotional spirit was emphasized by the earnest prayers for help and guidance. The singing, which always adds so much to a convention, was ably conducted by Mr. John Gore.

There are 17 Sunday schools in the district and 13 were represented—Providence, Shiloh, Mars Hill, Mt. Moriah, Jemison, Baptist and Methodist Rocky Mount, Oak Grove, Ocampo Pleasant Hill No. 2, Mt. Pleasant, Union Grove and Free Springs. We regret very much that Concord, Center Hill, Freeman's school house and Arches Chapel had no representatives. Mr. W. U. Conway gave the visitors and delegates a most hearty welcome and verified his remarks by his kindness and thoughtfulness in providing for their comfort and welfare throughout the day. Mr. C. M. Northcutt responded in behalf of the visitors thanking Mr. Conway and the residents of the community for their cordial reception. The program included the "Primary Work," by Miss Gibson; "Temperance," by Dr. A. Horn Rev. J. M. Parrish, Rev. Lucas and Rev. Davis; essays on Sunday school work by Misses Lowery, Patton and Johnson; the "Duties of Teachers and Superintendents," by J. A. Beal, and a most interesting description of his trip to Palestine by Mr. F. W. Crumpton. The maps and souvenirs gave a touch of reality to his vividly told memories of this visit to the Holy Land, making us feel for the moment as if we, too, had traveled the old, old road up to hill-girted Jerusalem that we had threaded her narrow streets, and had seen her desolation, the bitter fulfillment of prophecy.

The invitation was accepted to hold the next convention at Jemison Baptist church, and the president appointed the following committee to prepare the program: J. A. Wraggs, chairman; W. R. Houldrich, C. M. Northcutt and Rev. J. A. Beal.

The ladies served a most bountiful dinner, which was thoroughly enjoyed by the large crowd present. In all things the day was successful and the officers, Messrs. Shaw, Conway and Lowery are to be congratulated on the very thriving Sunday school organization in the Jemison district.

Sec. 7 1-2. The following persons and no others, who, if their place of residence shall remain unchanged, will have, at the date of the next general election the qualifications as to residence prescribed by section 1 of this act, shall be qualified to register as electors, provided they shall not be disqualified under section 2 of this act:

Such certificate shall be issued free of charge to the elector. The Secretary of State shall, at the expense of the State furnish the Judge of Probate blank certificates for use as provided in this section.

The certificate of the registrars or the Judge of Probate or of the Secretary of State shall be sufficient to establish the fact of such registration.

* * * * * * * * * *

Be sure and register when the registrars are in your beat, as the only excuse for not doing so is by reason of sickness of yourself or in your family or by absence from the county. Everybody can register this summer who will be qualified by residence or age by the 8th day of November. Poll tax paying has nothing to do with registration; you can register now and pay your poll tax afterwards, but you cannot vote unless you are both registered and have paid your poll tax (if any is due). The period of residence necessary to register is two years in the State, one year in the county and three months in the beat. If you have moved from one beat to another in the county less than three months before election day, you can vote in your old beat, so you don't lose your vote by changing beats. Any one who desires to register on property qualification should take with him his last assessment sheet and tax collector's receipt to show to the registrars as proof that you are possessed of such property and pay taxes on it. You can register under ANY of the following heads:

1. If you own forty acres or more land in this State, and reside upon it.
2. If your wife owns forty acres or more land in this State, upon which you reside.
3. If you own real estate in this State that is assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
4. If your wife owns real estate in this State assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
5. If you own personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
6. If your wife owns personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
7. If you can read and write any section of the constitution of the United States.

Don't give up your life certificate that you got in 1902; you only have to show it to the registrars in case you have moved to this county from some other county.

THE UNION will furnish any one information on any special points that they may be in doubt upon, and stands ready to help any one to get all the rights he is entitled to under the laws of Alabama. If you think you are entitled to register and the registrars should refuse you, take a couple of good men with you so you can have witnesses as to such refusal and the reasons given by the registrars, and thereby be enabled to take your case upto high authority. tf

Dear Editor:

Please allow me a small space in our paper. Health of this community is good at present, and most all the farmers are up with their work, but are needing rain very much. We have a nice Sunday school of about sixty scholars. Several of our young people visited the singing at Jackson's Chapel Sunday, among whom were R. W. Littlejohn, Misses Cynthia and Lucinda Littlejohn and Miss Dovie Smith. W. W. is a regular visitor to W. F. L. every Sunday. J. F. Hayes and wife visited the latter's parents Sunday. Hurrah for "Just a Voter." As this is my first time, I'll close with best wishes to The Union, editor and readers. S. S. SCHOLAR.

The government of New South Wales has spent over $4,000,000 for all kinds of means to prevent the growth of the rabbit plague, and it has now been decided to fence in the whole country with an immense wire net.

The expense for this wire net is estimated to exceed $5,000,000, and it is thought that the wire required for this purpose can be imported from abroad at the cost of about $150 per mile, delivered at Sydney.

The rabbit plague is increasing from year to year, which is best shown by the fact that such an enormous amount as $5,000,000, or nearly 10 per cent of the annual revenue of the country, is to be spent for this purpose.

FOR SALE!

300 acres land, 150 acres in cultivation. All in Sec. 6 T., 20, R., 14, 9 miles S. W. of Clanton. Good dwelling house and out buildings and 3 good tenant houses. Good and lasting well of water. This good farming land will be sold at a bargain. Call and see,

Bank Your Saving's With a Safe Bank.

Every man, woman and child, no matter where they live, should have a savings account with the Citizens' Savings Bank of Birmingham, for the following reasons:

It is the only bank of importance in the state which confines its banking business strictly to savings accounts and accessory commercial business. The banking laws of Alabama provide that where a bank doing both a savings and general banking business becomes insolvent, the depositors who had no accumulated for interest (commercial) will have preference over those who had their money in the bank for savings—in other words, the savings depositors can't be paid a cent until the commercial depositors have been paid in full.

We take no trade risks; all our loans are made on first mortgage improved real estate mortgages or other gilt-edge collateral security—our motto being "The strength of a bank is in its individual loans."

These things, backed up by our cash capital and responsibility of our board of directors and the long and successful experiences of our officers in the banking business, render the bank as safe as United States bonds.

Bank with us by mail. It is easy and safe. Write for information.

WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, the Father of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

I not only think this is the best, safest and cheapest plan of insurance on the market today, but a plan appealing to the patriotism of every Southern man and woman to enlist their aid, influence, patronage and endorsement in fostering a home institution that protects the people at actual cost in lieu of supporting those that drain our lovely Southland of money that leaves it never to return, to enrich foreign corporations and build up foreign enterprises. It only cost my husband $7.15 to leave me the above amount.

GOOD MORNING.

Day daws and bids the blushing sky
"Good morning!"
The flute-voiced birds take up the cry:
"Good morning!"
And nearer home, beneath the eaves,
The gnarled old maple's tender leaves
That shivered in the midnight rain,
Now whisper at my window pane:
"Good morning!"
The genial sun peeps o'er the hill
And laughs across my window sill.
Eyes quiver under sleepy lids—
This is the King himself who bids
"Good morning!"

I rise and ope the window wide,
The sun-kissed breezes charge and ride
Straight through the breeze in merry rout,
And scale the walls and fairly shout:
"Good morning!"
They made me captive to the King,
They pluck at me and bid me sing
Their paean to the Golden Day,
Whose conquering slogan is their gay
"Good morning!"

They frolic here, they scamper there,
They clutch the singing birds in the air,
On all the world their music beats
"Good morning!"
Heart to heart. The surly wight,
Who scorned his neighbor yesternight,
With smiling visage stops to greet
That neighbor in the busy street:
"Good morning!"

O joyous day! O! smile of God
To hearten all who toil and plod,
We hail thee, Conqueror and King!
We hug our golden chains and sing:
"Good morning!"

Uncle Jeffy's Latest Catch.

By E. Crayton M'Cants.

Three miles out from Keowee, upon what is known locally as the "Mink Trap" road, and just at the summit of that long red hill which is flanked on one side by the stony slopes of the pasture land and on the other by the brown wastes of the stubble and the straight green rows of the corn, stands the "Uncle Jeffy Barnes old place." The house—a quaint "double-log" cabin—has little in common with the newer dwellings which the negroes round about inhabit, for men do not build its kind any more. Modern cabins may be reared in a day, and are built, principally, of thin boards and of scantling, but the domicile of old Jeffy Barnes is a relic of a bygone age, and stands as a specimen of that rude order of architecture which was evolved under the stress of circumstances, and which served over fifty years ago to shelter those faithful black slaves, of whom Uncle Jeffy was one.

For when old Benjamin Barnes, Uncle Jeffy's one time "marster," had come to die, realizing the honest service of Jeffy and that of gentle Aunt Sara, he had bequeathed to the two old negroes some acres of land that lay about the hill, and had given them the cabin as well—the cabin which was then but a single-roomed pen of logs, but to which old Jeffy, as great of muscle in those days as he is now of heart, soon added another pent-log room, shed-rooms and passages, and in front, a long, low-roofed "py-azza."

The site of the house, with its cribs and outlying barns, is quite an elevated one, and in the warm spring mornings, when the trailing mists hide the tall cottonwoods that fringe the nearby streams, and cover, as with a garment, the long, low stretches of the fertile valley land, the earliest beams of the upcoming sun fall here upon the tops of the spreading old red oak trees. Then, before the amber light has time to drop downward to the roofs of the barns, the lusty, black ploughmen emerge from their doors and go whooping across the green breadths of the fallows, and the red cattle and the dun wander forth to pasture, and presently one may hear the sheep-bells tinkling on all the far-off slopes—for Uncle Jeffy is a notable farmer and his day's work begins with the day. Later, long after Aunt Sara has put aside "de brekfus' things," and has taken complacently to her rocking-chair and her knitting, the gray mist begins to dissolve in the warm and liquid sunshine, and as it streams away and vanishes, the land far-stretched and fair lies open to the eye like some panoramic view. In one place there is a spring overhung by pale green willows, further along a little brook brawls in miniature fury over the opposing stones, while further still there is the gleam of the creek as the hurrying water slips quickly past the bridge, only to linger further along in the deep pools and in the eddies which lie beyond the bends. To the right of all this the hill falls away rapidly, and stands foot to foot with a long gray ridge whereon the hickory trees and the great pleasant white oaks grow, while north and east and south and west other crests show themselves, and behind these others still, until at last there is but the far horizon where, as it were in the semblance of hills, the little blue cloudlets lie. And over it all, over hillside and valley and stream and wood, there drifts the marvelous sunlight, and the Keowee country seems a peasant land, and the Uncle Jeffy Barnes' old place seems set in the midst thereof.

So it may be that one passing that way will linger for a space in front of the old-fashioned dwelling, and will notice that the moss lies green on the steep and shingled roof and upon the well curb that stands beside the door. And such a one, standing in the red, dusty stretch of the road and looking beyond the doorway and the curb, will see under the trees of the yard a milkhouse that is suggestive of shadows and of great stone crocks, while nearer the fence there are beehives and damask roses and trailing honeysuckle vines. And with so much given the traveler, be he a man of even small understanding, will picture readily the faces of those old people who from the eternal fitness of all things must necessarily inhabit here—will imagine Aunt Sara Barnes, with her broad, black, good-humored face and her blue-checked, cotton apron, and will give heed to Uncle Jeffy's voice as the old man calls: "'Light, boss, 'light; an' des come in dis yere py-azzy, suh, an' res'."

But if in response to the invitation so heartily given our traveler should seek to enter, he will likely find opposing his passage a dog—a bandy-shanked and brindled dog, which will plant itself firmly in his way and will growl ferociously and otherwise so misconduct itself that Uncle Jeffy will hurry out in alarm to cow the beast with hot words and with blows. Afterward, however, when cool water has been brought and the wayfarer is duly refreshed, the old man will turn again to the brute and will call to it temptingly:

"Here, Rowdy, here! Come here to me, my lad!" And he will take the evil looking head between his knees and will stroke the same reflectively. "Yas," he is accustomed to remark as he waggles the fragment of wolly beard which hangs at his chin, and spits well out across the steps, "Rowdy air part p'inter and part houn'—might nigh half houn', hit 'pears to me lak. An' I think thar's a lettle touch o' bull in him—an' then thar's some fice in him shore, fer his great gran'mammy on his daddy's side she were a full blooded fice. But I don't reckin he's got much tarrier blood. I jedges that ther rest uv him—what's lef' atter ther houn', an' ther p'inter, an' ther bull, an' ther fice—is just mostly dog. He's a mighty fine yawd dog, too, Rowdy is, but he air a gittin' a sight too sharp—he's agwine ter bite somebody ther very fus' thing I know. Thar he was a t'arin at you just now—I'll bout have ter brush him one er these days."

Then the old man will pinch the dog's ear, and Rowdy will yawn and will stretch his left hind leg as if to say, "What a pleasant morning it is." And when no one replies he will go back down to the gate, where he will turn round three times—presumably "for luck"—after which he will compose himself to rest.

In the leisure which this episode will afford him the wayfarer may study the old negro. He will, if perception has been vouchsafed unto him, observe that Uncle Jeffy has once been a "pow'ful man," and that even now his hairy chest still looks broad and muscular as it shows through the open front of his coarse, white cotton shirt. The old man wears no coat, of course—who wants a coat in the open Spring weather?—and his face is honest and shrewd. Only laughter, too—whole-hearted, kindly laughter—could have drawn those lines which radiate so finely from the corners of his quizzical eyes. And beneath all this, beneath the wrinkles which the years have left, and the dull and weather-beaten skin, and the gray growth of stubby beard, there exists an odd look of youthful drollery, as if the boyish blood time-hindered in its surface flow, still stirred within and sent new currents, warm and free, about the old man's cheerful heart.

It has been said by those who are in a position to know that in his youth Uncle Jeffy "wuz pow'ful wile"—that once he ran "hoss-races" and openly "fit chickens." But let this be as it may, our hero is a staunch enough church member now—and sleeps on Sundays very peacefully in the solemn "Amen corner" of "Lower Betharbry" church. And when Aunt Sara would call him to account for this somnolence he readily defends himself.

"Brother Larkin"—he will remark—"Brother Larkin, he do talk so feelin'ly 'bout that thar res'—ther res', sweet res,' whut we alls is agwine ter git over on t'other side o' Jurdin—'at ther ve'y fus' thing I know I is done fergit whar I is, an' I is a restin' afore my time."

But he cannot easily evade Aunt Sara. "Jeffy!" she will continue, "ain't you afeerd of de bad place, Jeffy?"

"Tooby shore," is his ready answer. "Tooby shore I is 'feerd. Dey say 'at water is skace in Torment an' I cuddent never go a fishin' thar!" For fishing is the old man's weakness, and he knows every "hole" in the creek.

But last June Uncle Jeffy had what he calls an "espeerunce." Some one in Keowee had given him a new recipe for bait—a bait which he was firmly assured would "suttinly fetch them suckers." The bait itself was a malodorous compound of dough, cotton batting and dried beef's liver, but, notwithstanding this, on the first "likely" day the old man set off for the stream to try its effect, followed according to time-honored custom by Rowdy, well-tried and true.

So familiar is Uncle Jeffy with those fishing "holes" that he has given to each one a name. There is the "minner-hole" and the "cat-hole" and the "brier-hole." The "minner-hole" lies just below the bridge. One is able to smoke in comfort there, and may hold converse with the passers-by as he waits for the fish to bite; while the "cat-hole" affords great sport whenever the stream is "up." But notwithstanding the fact that the day was fine, the sun lying warm on the long brown furrows of the hillside fields, the south wind just stirring in the leave, and the water laughing musically as it slid round the grassy bends, none of these places just now attracted Uncle Jeffy—not even the "water-hole," where a willow offers its shade, and where the rush and hurry of a foaming little fall strikes pleasantly on the ear. A half mile further down, however, and just at the spot where the "horse branch" pays its toll to the creek, there is a broad, still pool, which is deep at its upper end, but which shelves rapidly until it featheredges in a shoal against a white sand-bar below. Above this spot are cottonwood trees, and at their roots a fallen log offers one a pleasant resting place; moreover, there is brushwood close by, where a dog may amuse himself, and if he is diligent he may perhaps find a gray rabbit there. In view of these advantages the place attracted Uncle Jeffy, and it was here that he halted.

After the bait had been adjusted and the old man had seated himself and Rowdy had gone away to nose through the bushes, the silence grew soft and somnolent. Away off down the creek a bull-frog was croaking hoarsely; back in the long stretch of the road an empty wagon came rattling down the hill, and up among the leaves of the cottonwoods the heavy-winged bees were circling drowsily.

"H-r-r-ump! h-r-r-ump! h-r-r-umph!" chanted the frog, and its tones reminded Uncle Jeffy of the preaching of Brother Tom Larkin of "Lower Betharbry" church. Presently he closed his eyes in order to heighten the effect.

"H-r-r-umph! h-r-r-umph!" The line paid slowly out from the rod, the cork bobbed inshore, and the hook, floated upward by the light cotton which the bait contained, drifted down-stream into the shallow.

"H-r-r-umph!" The preacher by this time was well launched into his discourse, and Uncle Jeffy snored gently as his head drooped and rested lovingly against the trunk of the tree.

The afternoon wore along. The slanting sunlight crept under the leaves and rested on the old man's forehead, the wind caressed his gray locks, and the curving branches seemed to stoop toward his weather-beaten face, but all unheeding, he dreamed on and on and on. In his slumbers he had grown young again, and the preacher was rebuking his sins. His pole lay lax in his fingers, and the hook and the bait rested lightly against a bank of sand.

In the meantime Rowdy had grown tired. The one rabbit which he had started had behaved reprehensibly, and had led him a long chase around the brow of a gullied hill, then it had eluded him altogether. Ready to stomach refreshment let its kind be what it might, the dog came panting to the water's edge, lapped hastily, sniffed the inviting bait and then—

"Gee whiz! Hit's a gollywhopper!"

Startled almost into affright at the magnitude of his "bite," the old man "struck" and sprung, wide awake, to his feet.

Rowdy lunged. "Yi! kiyi! ky-i-i!" he yelped in the greatness of his pained surprise.

For a moment Uncle Jeffy stood speechless, then, as the dog plunged again, the situation dawned upon the old man and his face flushed.

"Come yere, Rowdy!" he yelled. "Come yere, yer blamed ole fool, an' lemme onloosen dat hook!"

But Rowdy, hurt now and voicing his wrongs until the red hills rang, ran backwards and sideways, struggling and leaping.

"Rowdy! Rowdy!" Mastering his wrath Uncle Jeffy tried persuasion, then rushed forward suddenly.

Rowdy crouched and tugged once more at the line, then in a last wild effort he shot forward as if from a catapult, struck Uncle Jeffy and tripped him, and both went down, yelling and yelping, into the deep, chill water of the creek.

When at last the hook had been extracted and the two had crept out upon the bank, sundown had come, the west was ablaze with purple and gold, and the bats were flying high to welcome the shadows. And, as the twilight gathered and Uncle Jeffy went walking up the path to his house, a single star came out above him, then another and yet another, and then, faint and far away, he heard Aunt Sara calling him.

"Here! here!" he replied, and she came to him.

"Is that you, Jeffy?" she asked. Her voice was tremulous and she drew very close to him, but as she touched his wet sleeve she stopped suddenly and faced him.

"Jeffy Barnes!" she exclaimed, very sternly, "You don't tell me youse been in dat creek!"

The old man looked aggrieved. "'Twarn't me!" he replied stubbornly. "'Twarn't me at all. Hit were Rowdy!"—Good Literature.

Housekeeper of a Big Hotel Knows No Servant Problem

THE woman who finds it a heavy burden to oversee one household with one maid will find it difficult to comprehend how one woman can adequately take charge of 600 sleeping rooms, forty or fifty parlors, linen rooms through which pass daily hundreds of dozens of pieces, and marshal anywhere from 200 to 300 servants, of all races and dispositions. Yet that, or something like it, is done by the housekeeper of every big hotel. The preparation and serving of food in the big hotels is confided to men, but a woman as housekeeper seems to be a necessity. Men are not up to the mark when the cleanliness of a house and its linen are in question.

The hotel housekeeper seldom appears worried or flurried, and it is doubtful if she goes to bed at night more worn than the average housewife. Professional training, system and command of money alter the whole situation.

The housekeeper of one of the largest hotels in this city has under her two assistants, a corps of men cleaners, with several head cleaners, each responsible for his own territory; another corps of women cleaners, a corps of parlor maids, another of chambermaids, and one of maids' maids. The last look after the rooms of employes. It is a little army that the housekeeper heads, with its captains and lieutenants, each responsible for certain things. In the linen room are half a dozen seamstresses mending linen. In the house linen laundry are four men and forty-five girls constantly at work, and in the personal laundry as many more.

It is always wash day at a big hotel. The housekeeper herself has her desk in a big, bright office, but there is no section of the great hostelry that does not pass under her eagle eye some time in the twenty-four hours. For her living apartment a handsome little suite is set aside, with her meals in the hotel restaurant—arrangements which would probably cost her $250 or $300 a month under other circumstances. The salary of such a housekeeper is from $125 to $150 a month.

The first warfare of the hotel housekeeper, like that of her domestic sister, is with dust. But with money at command the inventions of the age come to her aid in a way that they never do to her home sister. At the hotel referred to a sort of pneumatic dust-pan is used. It has a very long handle, containing a compressed air hose. This is run over carpets and upholstery and the dust is literally sucked out of them, not to be dispersed in the room and to settle again as when the broom is used, but to be drawn into a discharge pipe and thence be discharged into a closed dustbin, leaving the air of the room dustless. A similar device is used to suck away every flake of dust from chandeliers, carvings and odd corners. The dusting process for the entire mammoth structure is the most important thing which the housekeeper oversees each day. But cleaning never stops in one of these giant hosteiries. All day cleaners watch over their allotted portions, removing burnt matches and litter the moment they fall.

Then there are countless odd jobs for the housekeeper to attend to. If one of the big suites not in constant use is to be occupied the housekeeper personally superintends its cleaning and putting in order. If furniture is to be moved anywhere she oversees it. If a maid is ill, she sees her and sends the hotel physician. She keeps account of all linens issued, all reserve mattresses, blankets, pillows, etc. She alters the arrangements of rooms to suit occupants. She answers a thousand and one demands of guests, some of them quite reasonable, some enough to try the patience of a saint, if the saint has not a sense of humor.

Three times a day a gang of men takes to the supply room on each floor three dozen each of large and small pieces of freshly laundered linen. Every day tablecloths come in with great holes burned in them by cigars. These must all be darned; but the darning, too, is all done by machinery. In the supply rooms are kept scores of miscellaneous articles—extra cots, curling irons, hairpins, stationery, anything a guest may happen to want in a hurry. There is, too, a medicine closet, with hot water bags and simple remedies for guests who are not well, but not ill enough to call a physician.

In the linen laundry the machine reigns supreme. The soiled linen is fed into great hydraulic machines, which cleanse it by constantly changing streams of suds and clean water. Next it goes into "extractors"—great cylinders which revolve at the rate of 2200 turns a minute, and take out every particle of moisture, a change from the rubber wringer turned by the weary arms of so many laundresses. Then the linen is fed into a slowly revolving ironing machine, from which it drops gently on a table, where it is folded and stacked in snowy heaps for the supply room.

In the laundry, where the caps and aprons of the maids and the personal laundry of the guests is washed, handwork comes in again, for the machine has not yet been invented which can replace the fingers of women in ironing dainty lingerie. The machine is used for washing, but the last touch of elegance is given by a "family ironer," who earns $100 a month for work no better than many a housemother or her maid puts on the underwear of her family. But a hotel where many a guest's laundry bill foots up $40 or $50 a week right along can afford to pay its ironers good wages. A woman guest at this hotel sent down $70 worth of work at one time recently.

The housekeeper at the big hotel has the pick of the best help. She knows practically no "servant problem." The average salary of a good maid is $12 a week, which may run up to $20 in the case of a fine parlor maid. The maids' work is so arranged that they have some hours each day to themselves, and their evenings are their own, excepting for every fourth evening, when they must be on duty until midnight. The girls have their board and room in the hotel, their rooms are cleaned for them, their caps and aprons are provided, the hotel doctor treats them in illness. Moreover, the situation lacks the loneliness which obtains in a house where only one or two maids are employed. With all these advantages it is no wonder that the best help flocks to the hotels and the private home is deserted.—New York Evening Sun.

Welsh Attorney and Jury.

Baron Bramwell once appeared for the crown in a case in Wales. The counsel for the defense asked permission, as the jury was Welsh, to address its members in their native tongue. As the case was simple, the baron made no objection. The Welsh barrister said only a few words. The baron also was brief, but he was somewhat surprised at a prompt verdict of acquittal. "What was it," he afterward inquired, "that Mr. L— said to the jury?" "Oh, he just said, 'This case, gentlemen, lies in a nutshell. You see yourselves exactly how it stands. The judge is an Englishman, the prosecuting counsel is an Englishman, the complainant is an Englishman. But you are Welsh, and I am Welsh, and the prisoner is Welsh. Need I say more? I leave it all to you.'"

Jiu Jitsu in England.

The talk of jiu jitsu in this country recalls a story told by Walpole of "a great amateur, nay, practicer of boxing and wrestling," who willingly imparted his knowledge to those who consulted him. A somewhat sedate peer visited the baronet one day, and, walking with him in his garden, made the polite remark that he would like to see a specimen of his host's reputed skill; upon which the other "seized him suddenly from behind and threw him over his head." This is surely the earliest recorded instance of jiu jitsu in England, and merited the superb reply of the wrestler to the infuriated peer: "My lord, this is a proof of my great friendship for you. This master stroke I have shown to no other person living."

Giant Tomato Plants.

The largest tomato plants in the world are found in California. One grower has three plants which have reached a length of thirty feet. In three months from the time the seeds were planted the vines had climed to the top of a twenty-foot trellis.

The trunks of these plants, says What to Eat, are one and a half inches in diameter and the foliage is thick and luxuriant. Enormous quantities of tomatoes have been picked from them and the fruit is of unusual size, possessing an extraordinary fine flavor.

Troublesome Teeth.

When Scandinavians come to this country they frequently have trouble with their teeth. Later, owing to the difference in diet, they lose most of their bicuspids and molars; but fortunately, few Scandinavians have the trouble that Tillie did, and few lose their teeth in so disconcerting a manner.

"My funniest patient," said the sociable dentist, "was a Swedish girl, who came in one day to get her teeth extracted. Her upper jaw was absolutely bare of teeth, and the lower set was in such condition that there seemed to be nothing to extract.

"'What are the teeth you want out?' I asked.

"'In my stomach,' returned the girl suddenly bursting into tears.

"'In your stomach!' I gasped.

"'Yaw, meester,' she sobbed. 'Last week my hov buy me all new toots on top vor twanty-five dollar, on Chicago. Two days ago my sleep so goot, so-o goot! Ven my vake opp, mys toots she vor all go down mys t'roat. I tank maybe you can get them out—mys lady she is tole me to come.'

"'Nonsense! They couldn't go down your throat.'

"'Yaw! Yaw!' protested Tillie, clapping a hand to her belt-buckle. 'She iss there now. She iss chew, chew, chew, all the time. She iss chew all my inside up. She iss hurt so moch my iss don't can sleep.'

"Tillie was evidently sincere," said the dentist, "and I was beginning to think that I had a lunatic on my hands when the day was saved. My office door was flung open and an excited boy rushed in.

"'O Tillie,' he cried, 'mother just found your teeth tucked under your mattress! You must have taken them out in your sleep.'

"'My goo'ness!' exclaimed Tillie, apologetically. 'My hov some bodder vit mys toots every day since I come on America.'"

RAILROADS FOR COREA.

Japanese Making Country Centre of Trade in Far East.

One of the chief factors in the opening up of Korea to foreign trade is the building of a system of railroads through the "hermit nation" which the Japanese have undertaken. When these facilities for the transportation of goods and passengers have been provided, it is believed that Korea will become an important centre for the prosecution of trade in the Far East, and the little peninsula will assume a prominent position, commercially, which will attract the serious attention of the world of business.

The Seoul-Wiju Railroad was opened for traffic on December 1 last. The Japanese had constructed in thirteen months 310 miles of railway, a feat of which they are, with reason, proud. Immediately after the beginning of the war with Russia they had begun the work on this line and it is now practically completed. Yongsan, a little village on the banks of the river Han, two miles from Seoul, to the southwest, is to be the future railway centre of Korea. Here 165 acres of land have been set aside as a railway reservation, and the line for Wiju and the new road to Gensan, the principal port of the east coast, start from this point. The Seoul-Fusan and the Seoul-Chemulpo roads join with those for through connection, the trains of all four running to the capital on common tracks. It is intended, further, to run a broad-gauge road over the route followed by the military line from Antung to Feng Whang Cheng, and beyond, and to bridge the Yalu at a point above that place. With tracks laid from Antung to Moukden, the railway to Northern Korea will become a section of the great trunk line.

The total cost of the new roads to date has been, roughly estimating, $15,000,000, and an additional $10,000,000 and four years' work will be required to put the line into final shape. While at present but one tunnel, 557 feet long, has been constructed, there will eventually be eighteen, with a total length of 18,860 feet. The standard gauge, 4 feet 8 1-2 inches, has been used for the Seoul-Wiju and Seoul-Gensan roads, as for other railroads in Korea, and this fact furnishes a striking example of the general introduction of American methods and materials where once a footing has been obtained. The American Trading company built the first railroad in Korea in 1897-'99, using the American gauge, American engines, and American cars and materials throughout, and the Japanese bought out the original concessionaires, and to insure uniformity built on the same lines. Of the 60-pound rails used some came from Germany, but most of them came from the Carnegie works in this country. The ties came largely from the United States and the spikes from the Illinois Steel company.

The bridges are now chiefly of wood and built on piles. Their total length is 44,800 feet, the longest being 2,785 feet. The construction has been very difficult, owing to shifting bottoms, swift currents and frozen streams in winter, ice floes in spring and the summer floods. The greatest obstacles were encountered near Anju, where two rivers meet. The bridge materials used are largely American, although some were imported from England, and the Osako Steel company of Japan supplied a small proportion.

Coal for fuel has hitherto been imported from Japan, but it is hoped that the local mines in the neighborhood of Pingyang may be developed soon and furnish the necessary supply. The mines are easily accessible near the Taidong River.

Water carriage for commercial use to Chinnampo and Pingyang is cheap and convenient, which is another advantage for the progress of trade. The trip from Chemulpo to Chinnampo requires but eighteen hours, the run up the river to Pingyang taking eight hours more. The rates to Chinnampo range from $1.75 for steerage to $7 for first-class passage, and from 40 cents to $1.25 more to Pingyang. The advantage of sending cargo by water is apparent, as the rates from Chemulpo to Pingyang by steamer are about $3.60 a ton, while from Seoul to Pingyang by rail they are $4.07 a ton.

The Seoul-Gensan line was begun in July of last year, and a few miles have now been constructed from each terminus. The road will be 130 miles in length, and the construction difficulties will be greater than those on the Seoul-Wiju road. There will be six tunnels, the longest two miles, but there are no large streams to be crossed. The estimated cost will be $15,000,000.—New York Tribune.

Army Needs Machetes.

The machete, which was an implement of the Spanish troops in Cuba and the Philippines, appears destined to be adopted more generally by our own troops. Some five thousand of these huge knives have been issued to troops in the Philippines, by whom they are to be used in cutting paths through the thick underbrush, rather than as weapons. They have become indispensable in that capacity, and it has now been decided, on the recommendation of the General Staff of the army, to extend the machete to field artillery troops at home and add that implement to the individual equipment of the light artillerymen in the field. The machete in such instances will be worn in a sheath or scabbard attached to the belt. The machete is considered of special value to members of the mountain batteries, of which there are several in this country, all of them destined sooner or later for duty in the Philippines.—New York Tribune.

MICROBES WAR ON ONE ANOTHER

Sewage System of Saratoga Likely to Be Adopted by Burlington, Vt.

Professor O. H. Landreth, of the State Board of Health, and F. O. Sinclair, city engineer of Burlington, Vt., visited the sewage disposal plant at Saratoga with a view to the adoption of a similar disposal system for Burlington. At the conclusion of the inspection Mr. Sinclair announced that he would recommend a plant similar to that at Saratoga for his city.

The process of sewage disposal adopted by Saratoga is simple and inexpensive. It can be described as a process of nature, or likened unto a "battle of the microbes." The sewage flows into a large tank or basin, which is covered to expel the light. As soon as this tank fills up, microbes, which can develop and live only in the dark, begin to eat the sewage to prepare themselves for the struggle which they will meet in the next tank. They fatten and consume all there is to be consumed, and cry for more. They crawl through holes left for the purpose and emerge into the other tank. Waiting there is the enemy, or opposing microbes, and as wolves would pounce on a flock of calves, they meet and destroy this advancing enemy. The result is the liquefaction of all the forces, a clear and pure (ninety-eight and a half per cent. of purity) effluent, or stream of water, which can be drunk with more impunity than the average drinking water.

Burlington is the first of the Vermont towns to act on the recent order of the Vermont State Board of Health to purify water supplies. The State Board gave the cities until June 1 next to take the proper steps, and threatened, if they did not, to condemn the supply and order the discontinuance of its use. Mayor Burke at once appointed a committee to act in accordance with the order of the State Board. Similar action by all the towns will result in the purification of the waters of Lake Champlain.—New York Post.

Easily Counted.

A few years ago there lived in Thetford, Vt., a man by the name of Solon R. Berry, who was Deputy Sheriff for many years, says the Boston Herald. He concluded he would like to collect the taxes. Accordingly he supplied himself with ballots, and on arriving at the meeting he selected a man by the name of Porter to help him. Taking Porter to one side, he disclosed his plan to him, and after bracing Porter up two or three times, from the hip pocket, he gave him the batch of ballots with instructions to deliver them at the proper time.

At last the Moderator called for a ballot for Collector of Taxes and when the votes had been counted announced that Berry had only three votes.

Of course, "Sol," as he was called, was disappointed. Finding Porter alone in one corner of the hall in quite a contented frame of mind, he said: "This did not turn out as I expected."

"Neither did it as I expected," said Porter.

"There is something about it I don't understand," said "Sol."

"That is just the fix I am in," said Porter. "You voted for yourself and I voted for you. That makes two votes. What I can't understand is where did that other vote come from."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

The development of the steam turbine is one of the notable beginnings of twentieth century science. The Hon. C. A. Parsons estimates that six years ago the total horse-power of such turbines was 60,000 on land and 25,000 on the sea; and that it is now more than 2,000,000 on land and 800,000 on the sea. The chief land use is for large electrical generating stations. The principal savings, as compared with reciprocating engines, is a reduction of 25 to 40 per cent in the total capital cost of steam, and from 10 to 30 per cent in the cost of fuel, with a further economy of 25 to 30 per cent in the engine-room staff. A late type of 2,000 horse-power turbine has 20,000 to 50,000 blades, the surface speed of the several barrels being from 150 to 300 feet per second.

SEVEN YEARS AGO.

A Rochester Chemist Found a Singularly Effective Medicine.

William A. Franklin, of the Franklin & Palmer Chemical Co., Rochester, N. Y., writes:

"Seven years ago I was suffering very much through the failure of the kidneys to eliminate the uric acid from my system. My back was very lame and ached if I overexerted myself in the least degree. At times I was weighed down with a feeling of languor and depression and suffered continually from annoying irregularities of the kidney secretions. I procured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. I found prompt relief from the aching and lameness in my back, and by the time I had taken three boxes I was cured of all irregularities."

I can highly recommend Cuticura Soap as being the very best complexion soap made. It creates a perfect complexion, leaving the skin soft, white, and velvety. Five Million for a Fence.

The government of New South Wales has spent over $4,000,000 for all kinds of means to prevent the growth of the rabbit plague, and it has now been decided to fence in the whole country with an immense wire net.

The expense for this wire net is estimated to exceed $5,000,000, and it is thought that the wire required for this purpose can be imported from abroad at the cost of about $150 per mile, delivered at Sydney.

The rabbit plague is increasing from year to year, which is best shown by the fact that such an enormous amount as $5,000,000, or nearly 10 per cent of the annual revenue of the country, is to be spent for this purpose.

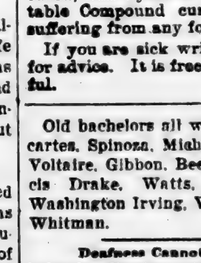
IN STRICT CONFIDENCE.

Women Obtain Mrs. Pinkham's Advice and Help.

She Has Guided Thousands to Health.—How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Mrs. Alice Berryhill.



It is a great satisfaction for a woman to feel that she can write to another telling her the most private and confidential details about her illness, and know that her letter will be seen by a woman only.

Many thousands of cases of female diseases come before Mrs. Pinkham every year, some personally, others by mail. Mrs. Pinkham is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years under her direction and since her decease she has been advising sick women free of charge.

Mrs. Pinkham never violates the confidence of women, and every testimonial letter published is done so with the written consent or request of the writer, in order that other sick women may be benefited as she has been.

Mrs. Alice Berryhill, of 813 Boyce Street, Chattanooga, Tenn., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Three years ago life looked dark to me. I had ulceration and inflammation of the female organs and was in a serious condition.

"My health was completely broken down and the doctor told me that if I was not operated upon I would die within six months. I told him I would have no operation but would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. He tried to influence me against it but I sent for the medicine that same day and began to use it faithfully. Within five days I felt relief but was not entirely cured until I used it for some time.

"Your medicine is certainly fine. I have induced several friends and neighbors to take it and I know more than a dozen who had female troubles and who to-day are as well and strong as I am from using your Vegetable Compound."

Just as surely as Mrs. Berryhill was cured, will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure every woman suffering from any form of female ills.

If you are sick write Mrs. Pinkham for advice. It is free and always helpful.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Advantages of the Farm

By Georgia B. Fisher.

IT has been said by many unacquainted with farm life that it is nothing but drudgery, nothing but discouragement, and that our children grow up in ignorance and toil without pleasure or enjoyment. Now I would not enter into any serious discussion, but I would like to ask, where could there be a better place beneath the sun to bring up our children than on a farm? Think of the children living in the heart of our largest cities, dark with the smoke of the factories and shops. They grow into maturity weak and puny for want of the warm sunshine, pure fresh air and healthy exercise.

Of course, there are many discouragements connected with farm work, so much so sometimes that we are almost tempted to lay down our "arms" and give up. Dark days will come sometimes when nothing will go to suit us. Everything is out of order. The baby is cross and fretful. As you turn your weary eyes toward the garden you spy the hens scratching in your best flower bed, and probably, to crown all, unexpected company comes at the eleventh hour, and you are at your wit's end. But two words will suffice to save us further trouble. Be calm. Take your time and go slow; do one thing at a time, and if dinner is a little late the company can wait until you get it ready. Only keep up a cheerful heart and evening will come and the children will gather home from school with merry shouts of laughter. The dark day is past and may not return again.

I would suggest, to ward off these dark days, that we arrange our work in systematic order as nearly as possible. Of course, there are days when our work will vary. Washing, ironing, baking, etc., does not come every day in the week, but by careful planning we can pass over these days without worry or trouble. Have a place for everything and everything in its place. Teach the children to be tidy by having them put their playthings in their places after they are done with them. Also teach them to be obedient, but be patient with them.—New York Tribune.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY DR. D. D. MACLAURIN.

Subject: The Unknowable.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Sunday morning the Rev. Dr. Donald D. MacLaurin, pastor of the Greene Avenue Baptist Church, preached on "To Know the Unknowable: a Prayer." The text was from Ephesians iii: 17-19: "To the end that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge." He said in the course of his sermon:

Who can know the unknowable? Is not this in the nature of a paradox? Wherein can one be so strengthened as to become able to apprehend that which is really beyond the reach of his apprehension? Has not Paul here erred in a prayer otherwise luminous, spiritual, profound and possible? Has he not introduced here something that ordinary mortals cannot grasp?

Well, I think that it will be as well for us to go slowly in our disposition to criticise him. It is a safe rule to assume that these apostolic men know what they were about. I am convinced that Paul not only knew by experience the things he said; but that he was inspired by the Holy Spirit in all his writing.

What about life? What about the duration of sentient existence? What about the continuity of that which we call ourselves? Tell us, thou biologist? Perhaps thy science is more exact than that of the mathematician or the man who philosophizes about time. Tell us, if you can, what is life? Hast thou ever seen it? No—never! Hast thou ever touched it? Only indirectly. Canst thou tell us what it is? No! Then space runs into infinity, time runs into forever and forever, and life runs into God! And we know something about all of these; and yet there is no limit to their vast extent. It has done us good to investigate them—it is a noble exercise—it is enlarging to the mind and the heart to come into contact with concepts so sublime and mighty as these.

So it is with this matter which Paul prays that we shall comprehend. We shall not be able to master it, and yet we can by studying it apprehend something to its immeasurable depths, something of its infinite length, something of its all inclusive breadth, something of its mighty altitude. And so Paul prays that we shall be so rooted and grounded in love that we shall be able to apprehend with all saints, high and lowly, rich and poor, ancient and modern, the dimensions of Christ's love. Now, let us for the sake of clearness of thought define a few of the terms of our wealthy text.

To the end that ye, being rooted and grounded in love. Love here means love toward our fellow creatures. Indeed, it always means that in the Bible unless it is otherwise defined. It means the affection we should have for the men and women of earth, the people of whom we are and to whom we belong by race connections. It is to be a reflection of God's love for the race. Its energy is to be measured only by the energy of the Divine love. Its inclusiveness is to be limited and measured only by the inclusiveness of the Divine love.

Out of the heart are the issues of life. When love is in the heart everything is love begotten. Foundationed, like a building which has been settled, as a whole, and will never show cracks or flaws in the future through failures in the foundation.

Here, then, is the idea of the soul being so placed as to make it strong for the noblest life. The two metaphors supplement one another—they belong to each other. The former, rooted, gives us the idea of organic life and growth; the latter, foundationed, gives us the idea of strength derived from the union of parts. A Christianity which is not rooted is always unstable. A Christian love that has not penetrated into the depths is not a love of a permanent or enduring character. O that the love of every one of us may penetrate into the very being of God! That the tendrils of our affections may twine themselves about the heart of the incarnate God! Then shall we be stable, then shall we grow.

To the end that ye, being rooted and foundationed in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints. Strong for what? That you may know the love of Christ in all its mighty dimensions! And this is a most natural evolution. To acquire love is to obtain finer powers of percepting. There is nothing like love for sharpening the wits. The eyes and ears of a loving mother are immeasurably quicker than the senses of the loveless. It is not true that love is blind; love is endowed with sight of enormous range. But while he was yet afar off His father saw Him.

Do not be surprised, therefore, to find that when we are rooted and grounded in love we obtain finer powers of apprehension. But what are divine love and grace! The holy panorama is stupendous, and even with our sharpened spiritual senses we cannot take in the infinite glory. And so the apostle tells us that we are to apprehend it with all the saints, with the help of all the saints'. It takes all of us to survey the vast estate. One Christian sees one aspect of the glory and another beholds another. The Matterhorn, seen from Zermatt, is one thing; from the Eggishorn it is quite another. And so with these stupendous wonders of divine glory. Each Christian is to behold his own share of the marvelous revelation. Matthew will discern one aspect, and Mark another, and Luke another, and John another. Each individual will behold some individual glory. The furrow of one field abounds in wonders; what then of the infinite estate?

1. Let us notice, how wide is the compass of love. To the end that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints, what is the breadth? How broad is its compass? Why, my friends, the love of Christ is so broad as to take in this whole world! The love of Christ comprehends all men, all people, reaching to the utmost stretch of human sin, or sorrow, or need—it is the great gospel whosoever. How broad is this love of Christ! There is actually no limitation to it.

Do you mean that Jesus Christ can love the man who has lived a wicked, yes, a vile life—who now bears upon his face the marks of the beasts—who is so repulsive that we shudder to look upon him—that man, that poor wreck of a thing—that man in the gutter, that man disowned by his own father, and, listen to it, his own mother, and all his friends? Will not that man's excesses shut him out from the love of Christ? No. No! Even for that man, defiled, wretched, Jesus Christ has love. He hates the sin; but loves the sinner. He came to seek and to save just such broken lives as that!

2. How far it will carry us. There are a great many really good people who fear to become open disciples of the Christ and unite with His church because they fear that they will not be able to hold out, as they say. Their ideal of the Christian life is so lofty that they fear they shall not be able to continue in well-doing to the end—so they stand aloof.

Then, there are a great many Christians in the churches who are fearful all the time—fearful as to the issue of their life, and many are especially afraid of death. They have a horror of it; they are afraid that it will come to them in an hour when they may not be ready for it; they are afraid that it may bring a pain that they may not be able to endure—and so they are full of terror.

And then there are Christian men and women, and young men and women everywhere, who are asking, "Is this Christianity able to carry us through this life?" Is it strong enough to carry us up the steep sides of the mountains of difficulty we meet in life? Is it strong enough to carry us safely through the valleys, where there are hissing serpents, and where the veiled vampires have their homes, and where crouching beasts of temptation are ever ready to spring upon us in an unguarded moment. Is this love of Christ able to carry us all the way through? On the high seas of life, in the stresses of all weather, when the billows roll and dash against our frail bark—is there a pilot able to guide the ship through the mighty seas?

Oh, look at what God has done! First: He has promised to provision us. Look at the eleventh verse of the eighty-fourth Psalm: "For Jehovah God is a sun and a shield; Jehovah will give grace and glory; no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." That is actually in the Bible. I sometimes think that we treat the Bible as if it were a huge joke—that these words do not mean what they actually say. Listen to them again: "No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." And these words are confirmed by our Master's own teaching.

Second: He has promised to protect us. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountains." Well, that may not be a wise thing to do. Is it wise to look at our difficulties? Is that what it means? But the Psalmist is not done: "From whence shall my help come?" No wonder, when you are looking at the mountains of difficulty, that you should say that. Now listen. "My help cometh from Jehovah, who made heaven and earth." Is that not good enough? No wonder Paul said: "What then shall we say to these things? If God is for us, who is against us?"

III. From what depth will it rescue us? The depth indicates the distance that love reaches. It goes down to the deepest forms of sin. It reaches to the greatest sinner. Wherefore, also, He is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through Him, seeing that He ever liveth to make intercession for them.

I shall never forget hearing one of the foremost Africans in a powerful speech in the City of Washington, D. C. He was pleading for patience. He pleaded with the people to give his race a chance and time, and he said: "'Oh, think of the depths—of the depths of impotence and superstition and poverty out of which and up from which my race must come.'" Ah, yes! But we were in lower depths still. Down beneath the black man, wearing shackles ourselves had forged about our feet and hands—the shackles of sin. It is up out of these depths our God must lift us.

IV. The height unto which He lifts us. For this Love is not only broad as our needs, continuous as our pilgrimage, reaches down to the depths where we are, but it also lifts up to the highest altitudes of the Divine Life. The way to measure is to begin at the cross and the foul abyss of evil and go up to the throne. This wondrous Love lifts up from the lowest degradation and sin to the glory of Sonship in the courts of heaven. How high will it lift us? O, God, Thou knowest.

Well, after we add all our powers together and seek to apprehend the love of Christ in its length and breadth and depth and height, the superlative glory is all beyond us! It passeth knowledge. Even when we are filled unto all the fullness of God, the overflowing is infinite! Let us soon see to it that we use our individual power to its utmost. Let us see to it that every capacity is hallowed. Let us open the innermost chamber and let in the King, and by the ministry of His love toward us these higher perceptions may become ours.

His Duty Became Clear.

A group of twenty-five Christian men had considered for an hour the question of personal evangelism. More than half of them had prayerfully agreed to try to form the habit of conversation about Christ. As the meeting broke up a well-known business man, seventy years of age, came to the leader, and with deep emotion, said: "There is a retired army officer living near me, for whom I have had deep concern for a long time. His daughter, a Christian woman, has often talked with me about him. My duty has now become clear. I am going to seek him out and try and win him for Christ." There are thousands of men, old and young men, who are waiting for the kindly conversation of a neighbor or friend to attract them to personal attachment to Christ.—Ram's Horn.

There never was so many total abstainers in our country and in the world as there are to-day.

By Lady Violet Greville.

THE Puritan element is slowly but surely dying o land. The old and honored word duty, used so by Nelson and Wellington in the great moments career, the old idea of a compelling factor in life solidity and worth to the English character, has a craze for pleasure. SITUATION EXTREMELY GRAVE.

Parliament Will Not Obey Order for Dissolution, Which Is a Purely

General Situation. The gravity of the general situation grows hourly. The city of St. Petersburg and Moscow is in a panicky condition, and the constitutional democrats and social-revolutionists, considering parliament to be of little quantity, are pushing their campaign for an armed uprising with increased vigor.

Conflagrations are daily occurring in the provinces. Many of Moscow in favor of a general strike, with which the proletarian leaders are struggling to precipitate matters. The situation among the peasants has reached the boiling point, and they are in heavy force in the manufacturing quarters.

In the country the rural guards are fraternizing in their lot with the peasants, refusing to protect the landlords. The progress of the revolutionary movement in the army is seriously alarming the government, and to add to the popular excitement comes the massacre of Jews at Bialystok.

Although the reports conflict as to the question of responsibility for the outbreak, the authorities here cannot escape responsibility for the provocative inflammatory circulars and hundred telegrams which they allowed to be printed throughout Russia, appealing to the worst passions of the people against the Jews as the enemies of the country.

Government Frightened. The government is undoubtedly frightened at what has occurred. Martial law has been declared at Bialystok and troops are being rushed to the city, but according to the latest reports the hunting down of unfortunate Jews continues unabated, accompanied by indescribable horrors.

The commission despatched to Bialystok by parliament can be relied on to call on the emperor to order a prosecution of parliament, and they have passed the important resolution not to obey the order. This amounts to defiance, and is a purely revolutionary act.

SEVERE EARTHQUAKE

Is Felt for Five Seconds in San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—A severe earthquake was felt here Friday evening. It lasted about five seconds. It was probably not heavy enough to do damage, though possibly it may have caused some of the walls of ruined buildings to fall.

Will Extend Alaskan Road.

Seattle, Wash.—The stockholders and trustees of the Alaskan Central railroad at their annual meeting amended the company's by-laws and trust deed to provide for the purchase by a syndicate of London and Holland bondholders of $8,000,000 of Alaskan Central bonds with which to finance the construction of the line. An agreement was signed with the Tanana Construction Company to complete the road as far as the Chicalon coal fields, 185 miles north of Seward, not later than eighteen months from July 1 of this year.

F. Augustus Heins, of Butte, Mont., was made a trustee. With this exception the old board of trustees was re elected.

New York Carpenters' Strike Settled.

New York.—Greater New York Council, Botherhood of Carpenters, has ratified an agreement between the carpenters and the Master Carpenters' Association, therby bringing to an end the carpenters' strike. The men return to work Monday.

By the agreement the master carpenters will raise the wages of the Brooklyn men from $4 a day to $4.50 a day and of the Manhattan men from $4.50 a day to $4.80 a day. The new wage scale of the Brooklyn men will go into effect August 16, and the new scale for the Manhattan men July 1.

First Notice Served on Packers.

Chicago, Ill.—The city health department Friday sent its first official written notice to the packing companies at the Union Stock Yards to improve the sanitary conditions of their plants.

The packers were instructed that they must within three days discard the filthy tables and benches, provide cleaner rooms and tools, and correct some of the present unsanitary conditions. Structural changes in the buildings, including new toilet rooms and more ventilation and light, must be made within thirty days.

Lester Dead.

Washington, D. C.—Representative Lester, of Georgia, who was injured Friday by falling through a skylight, died at 6:22 p. m. Saturday.

About 8 o'clock Mr. Lester took the elevator for the top floor in the apartment house. Nobody saw him after he left the car until he was found terribly mangled thirty feet beneath a shattered skylight, through which he had fallen. Mr. Lester was in search of his grandchildren at the time of the accident, and the supposition is that he went to the roof thinking that the little girls might be there looking at an airship which was to make an ascent at a local amusement park.

Mr. Lester was a native of Georgia, having been born in that state 69 years ago, and was prominent in southern politics for more than forty years.

Florence Infirmary Closed.

Florence, Ala.—After six years of splendid service, during which time about 50 patients were cared for, the City and County Infirmary has closed its doors, the reason assigned by the trustees being lack of funds. The institution has been supported by voluntary subscriptions, the city and county also appropriating small sums annually to aid in the work. The subscription has dwindled until the trustees found it impossible to meet their obligations, and the institution was closed.

Sentence Commuted.

Washington, D. C.—President Roosevelt has commuted the sentence of First Lieut. Lanier Cravens, of the artillery corps, who was sentenced to dismissal by court-martial for duplication of pay accounts. Upon the recommendation of the secretary of war the president changed the sentence to reduction to the foot of the list of first lieutenants of the artillery corps.

Baseball Bats Used to Kill.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—The baseball ground at Grassy Lock was the scene of a murder Saturday afternoon, and possibly, as the brother of the first victim seriously and perhaps fatally wounded his brother's assailant. A ball game among local youths was in progress when John Karrich, aged 19, became involved in a fight with E. E. Puckell. He struck Puckell with a baseball bat, crushing his skull and causing almost instant death. While the other players stood about the stricken man Puckell's brother rushed upon Karrich with another bat and inflicted injuries which may cause his death.

Tightens Quarantine.

New Orleans, La.—A quarantine order prohibiting all passenger traffic from all tropical fruit ports to this state has been issued by Dr. C. H. Irion, president of the Louisiana state board of health. The order was issued because of a report received here from the resident medical inspector at Port Limon, Costa Rica, stating that within the last few days 150 persons from Colon had arrived there, many of them having left Colon because of fears of yellow fever.

Bluefields, Nicaragua, and Beliz, British Honduras, are shut off from passenger traffic by this order, all other tropical fruit ports having been previously quarantined against.

Work on Dreyfus Case.

Paris.—The supreme court, behind closed doors, Saturday completed its examination of the secret documents of the ministries of war and foreign affairs concerning the Dreyfus case. The public session began Monday, when the attorneys for the prosecution and defense summed up.

A rumor has gained circulation in the corridors of the palace of justice that a careful canvass showed that a majority of the court were already in favor of quashing the judgment of Rennes court-martial without further trial of proceedings. According to this report twenty-five out of the forty members of the court are in favor of setting aside the judgment.

Girl Caused Wreck.

Marietta, O.—Little Alice Kyle, a school girl and daughter of a farmer residing between Macksburg and Elba, has confessed to having caused the wreck of the Pennsylvania flyer near the latter town on Thursday night, in which two passenger coaches were overturned and the engine, tender and mail car hurled down an enbackment.

The girl, who is 12 years of age, said that she wedged a rail bolt between the ends of two rails, just to see the train smash it, as it had smashed nails and pennies.

The girl will not be arrested, as the railroad officials are satisfied that it was a childish prank.

Another Star Is Added.

Washington, D. C.—Another star was added to the Union when President Roosevelt signed the bill admitting Oklahoma and the Indian Territory as one state. The measure also provides that Arizona and New Mexico may be admitted to statehood as the state of Arizona, provided the people of the territory vote in favor of admission on the terms submitted to them by congress.

The signing of the measure was made the occasion of an interesting ceremony. Senator Beveridge and Repreman of the house and senate committees on territories, who have worked long and hard to bring about the enactment of the measure, were present as also were Delegate McGuire, of Oklahoma, and a delegation of residents of Oklahoma, Denegate Andrews, of New Mexico, Secretary Loeb and several others.

Issues Rescript.

Corea Sails for Europe.

New York.—Luis F. Corea, Nicaraguan minister to the United States, has sailed for Europe on the steamer Zeeland.

Supreme Court to Adjourn.

Montgomery, Ala.—With the session of Friday the supreme court closed the call of cases from the Eighth division of the state, and took an adjournment until Saturday. From now until the end of the month no more cases will be introduced in the high court, although the members will continue their deliberations of cases already handed in until June 30.

Soldiers Killed in Warsaw.

Warsaw.—A band of thirty revolutionists Saturday attacked a branch postoffice which was guarded by a small detachment of military, killing several of the soldiers and wounding three of them. After a further fight the band was driven off, but seven of its members were captured. A sergeant of police has been killed in the streets and a policeman and soldier wounded. The assassins escaped.

First Bloom in Lauderdale.

Florence, Ala.—The first cotton bloom reported for Lauderdale county was brought to town Friday by W. L. Hurst, of the Reserve.

ALABAMA NEWS

$2,250,775.14 In Alabama Vaults.

Montgomery, Ala.—The cash in the state treasury was counted this week at the instance of the two bond companies on the bond of Treasurer J. Craig Smith. This is done from time to time, as is also the cash counted at stated intervals by request of the governor, according to statute. An expert from each of the bond company offices was here. The treasurer was present, as was Judge Wilkerson, one of the state examiners.

After giving two days to the work it was reported that the vaults contained $2,250,775.14. The bookkeeping was highly complimented by the two experts. Every cent was accounted for and properly shown in the books and the cash account. The system of the office was very satisfactory to the visitors and to the state examiner.

Over $300,000 in securities are in the vaults, deposited there by security companies doing business in the state, and in addition to the cash account.

Standard Warehouse in Opelika.

Opelika, Ala.—A standard warehouse is a mammoth new enterprise for this city, backed by capitalists from Baltimore and Birmingham. This warehouse will be a handsome brick structure, erected on the site of the old baseball park, near the Central of Georgia railroad, with trackage and splendid outlets. The strong and handsome building will cost $25,000. The following excellent business men promoting this enterprise makes it a sure success and a paying investment: J. M. Lewis, of Baltimore; Ned Lewis, of Birmingham; Bartow Smith and R. H. Lindsey, of this city.

Politics in Morgan.

Decatur, Ala.—New life has been injected into the politics of this county since Chairman James Simpson, of the county executive committee, has called a meeting of the committee for June 23, to be held in Hartselle. The meeting of the committee is for the purpose of fixing a date for the holding of the county primary and for such other business as may come before the committee. It seems to be the general belief that the county primary will be held on the same date of the state primary, August 27.

The candidates for the legislature will start out on their campaign of speech-making within the next few weeks, and things of a political nature are expected to warm up to a high pitch at that time. John R. Sample, of Hartselle, has entered the race for the state legislature, making six now in the race for that office, with two to be elected.

Mayor Henry A. Skeggs is in South Alabama this week in the interest of his candidacy for the office of associate railroad commissioner and has met with much encouragement in his trip over that portion of the state.

Two Boys Killed on Trestle.

Mobile, Ala.—At the tank at Hurricane Bayou, on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, early Friday morning, according to a report received here, the bodies of two white boys were found beside the track, their heads crushed. Indications showed the boys had been asleep on the track, and it is thought both were killed by a northbound freight.

J. A. Huggins, of this city, found the bodies. He identified them as C. H. Busbee and Webb. Busbee was identified by his cap, which had his name inside. Webb had been seen with him and it was thought by this he was identified. The boys were about 15 years of age, five and a half feet tall. Busbee wore a blue serge suit, with overalls above, the other wearing blue overalls. The bodies were brought here. It was impossible to recognize either.

Petition for Pardon.

Cullman, Ala.—Frank Williams, a son of John Williams, who is under sentence of death for the murder of Senator R. L. Hipp, is circulating a petition for the pardon of his father. Williams is in the Jefferson county jail for safe keeping. The supreme court has set Friday, July 27, for his hanging.

Jasper, Ala.—The county commissioners have decided to have the present county court house remodeled and have authorized the architects to prepare plans so that bids may be advertised for. A sum approximating $35,000 will in all probability be expended on the present building, which it is claimed will give the county a building worth over $50,000. The building used at present will be enlarged and remodeled, so that when the work is done the new structure will be one of the handsomest court houses in the state. It is stated that the work is to begin within a very short time. General satisfaction seems to prevail with the decision of the commissioners.

CHANCE TO BREAK RECORD DIVE

Experiments Show Possibility of Going Down More Than 200 Feet.

The Royal Society, of London, has just issued a report of interesting experiments by Professor L. E. Hill and the younger scientist, M. Greenwood, with a view of ascertaining the effects of compressed air on the human system. Besides throwing light on obscure points in physiology, the experiments will have a practical result in the direction of enabling greater depths of water to be reached by divers than heretofore.

It has been well known that it was impossible for divers to go below a certain depth owing to the necessity of compressing air within the diving dress to resist the pressure of the water. Few divers have ever reached 170 feet. The record dive is 204 feet, but it killed the diver. Until a method superior to the present one is invented, heaps of buried treasures which are known to be lying in spots on the ocean bed cannot be recovered.

The experiments of Messrs. Hill and Greenwood seem to open the way. They tried the effects of compressed air on themselves, using a specially made steel cylinder of forty-two cubic feet capacity, with a motor driven pump for compression, and specially designed taps for decompression. In this cylinder they underwent a pressure of five atmospheres, which is equivalent to a depth of 170 feet. Mr. Greenwood successfully resisted seven atmospheres, which is equivalent to more than 200 feet.

Professor Hill believes that the functions of the body are normal in compressed air. Both men remained in five atmospheres for four or five hours. They measured their respiration and noted the state of the blood, temparature, etc. They subjected dogs, monkeys, cats, rats and mice to even ten atmospheres and they resisted successfully. One monkey was subjected to eight atmospheres three times a week for four hours for a month, and did not show the least unfavorable symptoms.

Professor Hill's cylinder is entered through a sort of porthole on the side. The experimenter lies on a mattress. The interior is lighted by electricity and there is telephonic communication. Professor Hill is convinced that with proper appliances it will be possible to dive far deeper than heretofore. He believes that the deaths of divers are due to their being brought to the surface too rapidly. More time, he says, ought to be allowed for decompression. —New York Sun.

CONFESSED TO HIS MULE.

VENTRILOQUISM USED TO GET FACTS ABOUT A MURDER.

Ebony Baalam Obeyed Voice—Animal Demanded a Full Recital of the Crime and Terrified Negro Quickly Responded with the Story.

The detective, who by aid of ventriloquism and a mule, secured from a negro a confession which led to the arrest of Will Christmas and Walter Holland, near Dotham, Ala., writes the Atlanta (Ga.) correspondent of the Philadelphia Record, was an Atlanta man, named F. Schmidt.

The story of the manner in which the evidence was secured, almost incredible as it is, is apparently confirmed. The outline of it is that the sleuth suspecting that the negro knew something of the crime, secured a statement on the strength of which the two men were arrested and taken to Campmellton, Fla., where they will be held pending further investigation of their connection with the triple murder in the Christmas family. Will Christmas is the son of one of the trio murderered, and Holland is a son-in-law.

In his early days, Schmid manifested a ventriloquistic ability, and more than once brought his voice-throwing propensities into play. As he grew older he found good use for his gift, and was a star in many parlor entertainments. Then as he drifted into detective work, for which he appeared to have natural ability, he more than once made use of his gift, but never as successfully as upon this occasion.

Some three weeks ago a local detective agency was asked to send a man to Marianna, Fla., to investigate the murder, and a man was immediately dispatched. It didn't take him long to satisfy himself that he was on the right lead. He found, too, that it was through suspected negroes that he must work, and knowing the superstition of that race, he began laboring on that line.

Making himself out a fortune-teller, that detective found easy access to many of the negro homes in that section. Then introducing table rapping, held many a seance at which negroes for miles around were present. Then jumping at a broad guess he began hinting at events in the lives of the attendants, at which each member of the audience showed indignation, then surprise. Not really knowing whether he was reaching effective grounds or not, the detective kept up his line, and realizing that Schmid's gift as a ventriloquist would stand him a good hand, he wired his chief to send Schmid on. Schmid came, but at first did not show his face. He and his forerunner, however, held a consultation or two, and mapped out a line of campaign. At the next seance Schmid was hid outside the house while the spirits were moving about within, the dying pine torch on the big hearth throwing its weird shadows over the group gathered around the table at which sat the detective and a dozen black skin men and women. As the table began to move and some departed spirit manifested itself to the fat dame of the house, a stillness came over all as the message from the dead was being read by the medius. Then, just as the stillness was the most strenuous, a voice arose from the middle of the table. It said:

"Jackson, Mr. Christmas wants to speak to you."

With a bound and a yell the negro, who had been suspected of knowing something of the triple killing, went into the air, every one about the table springing up and calling on the Lord for mercy. Then flat upon the floor the women fell, while more than one of the men rushed from the house into the cool air. For a few minutes there was a perfect frenzy of fright in that cabin, and the seance for that night was cut out right then and there. The Secret Service man alone knew that his confederate hidden in the cabin had worked his powers mighty well and for the next day or two neither he nor Schmid came near the scene.

Then, on Wednesday last, while Jackson was at work in the field behind his mule, Schmid made his appearance with his companion. Soon the conversation turned on fortune telling and seances. Schmid being introduced as the greatest medium on earth, as the man who could make any spirit come to hand at any time.

"And," said the medium, "I'll bring him around tonight and we'll have a good time."

"No, 'scuse me, boss," said the negro, showing evident excitement. "I don't want no more of them seances about me. I'se done had the last one I wants to see. No, sir; no more for me."

"But, Jackson," said the medium, "you don—"

Just here the mule spoke, saying:

"Jackson, tell the truth. Tell these men what you and I saw that night at the Christmas home. The night you rode me over there. You can't fool them. They have been sent here by the Lord to save you."

As the words fell upon the negro's ears he began quaking. His teeth chattered, the whites of his eyes rolled around and around and great beads of perspiration appeared on his forehead. Before the sentence had been finished the negro had rushed in front of the mule and as the impatient animal tossed his head that negro dropped upon his knees, yelling:

"Dat's God's voice, sure. I done heard that before and I recognise it. If it wasn't God's voice den that mule—he couldn't talk. Dar mule is telling de truf, and God is bringing sin home to me."

Pitiable was the negro's plight not even after it had been brought home to him that he had been led into a confession did he appear to doubt his declaration that it was God's voice, sure."

HOPE FOR BIG EATERS.

These Famous Old Men Always Indulged in Good Square Meals.

The man with a good appetite has a hard time nowadays. All the dists are shouting that he eats too much.

If he doesn't jump at the chance of fasting 40 days he is scorned, if he doesn't joyously cut out of his quondam three meals a day he is scorned.

But once in a long while he can get a little comfort. A writer in Truth gave him hope recently by telling about famous old men who had been hearty eaters.

There was Victor Hugo, who in the very stronghold of French cookery kept an Irish cook who had attended to her master at table hated messes and gravies, and thought a dish unwholesome unless fused to let him partake of it.

She had her reward in the heartiness with which he ate of her roast and boiled viands—such as a leg of mutton, rib of beef, ham, slices of Wiltshire bacon and greens—a dish one hardly ever tastes in France.

She and Mme. Drouet, the old friend and secretary of Victor Hugo through the latter part of his public career, were agreed in satisfying the full his fondness for early vegetables and new potatoes and insisted on them being passed at the table, which was spread with many disciples, admirers hangers-on they must have cost him a fortune.

Asparagus, which cost 25 cents more a stalk, was often served. He go always taking a generous helping and then calling for more. He arranged the stalks circularly on his plate, with the points downward like the spokes of a wheel, and then poured the sauce in the middle in a space left vacant for it. This arrangement was always symmetrical. He disliked to see a broken stalk. He talked while eating, and ate what might have thought, enough for two or three laborers.

All the sons of Louis Philippe were bonnes fourchettes, and without being tipplers, were fond of good high-class French vintages. Two of them—Nemours and Joinville—exceeded the four score limit. The Duc d'Aumale attained his 76th year. The Duc de Montpensier lived to the age of 66, but his early death is been attributed to his habit of drinking the chocolate made for the cess.

She required half a kilo of chocolate for each person at the petit jeuner, with toast allowed to soak in a toast rack which she filled thickly herself.

The Princess Clementine, the only surviving child of Louis Philippe, has all her life been a great eater, without, however, Bourbon cess. She is now 86.

Discovery Aids Overworked Women.

An accidental discovery made by a writer is proving a source of comfort to many a woman whose refuse to allow her to finish her or sewing comfortables.

The discovery was simply that tired from long-continued application to a printed or written page—anything in which the sharp black and white was unbroken by color—could be rested by looking at something which was full of color, the more the colors and the more variegated the greater the rest.

Try it some day, when the task of sewing not only tires you, but actually confuses your vision.

That writer—being a man—found out a logical solution to his tiresome problem by keeping on his desk a penwiper that rivaled Joseph's coat in its use of many colors. It worked like a charm.

Another way of relieving eyestrain is to look up every now and then, letting your gaze upon something as far away as possible. You can work a longer time, with less effort, in the following, than if you drive yourself forcing yourself to accomplish work, in spite of pain and fatigue.

It is a well known fact among physicians that sight can be forced only at its strength and then made to pay up the terrific work by sheer force of will, but followed by the inevitable reaction, which often takes a serious form.

Gramophone Test of Voice.

A young lady from America has just won a singing scholarship in London under novel circumstances. From her colonial home she sent to a well-known professor in London a "record" of her voice, with the request that he would test it on the gramophone and inform her whether he thought its qualities were such as good to justify her in taking the journey for an examination for the scholarship. The professor listened to the "record," was duly impressed with the possibilities of the voice and wrote to say he thought she might try. Encouraged by this report, she reached England and presented herself for the examination, and was one of the two successful candidates out of 200 competitors.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Success never goes out of style to chase a man.

THE WIDOW SPOILED IT.

Banker of Marshall Field Who Was Persuaded to Ask for a Raise.

Among the charities of the late Marshall Field was a pension list of persons to whom a stated sum was paid regularly each month. With all he was generous, but he disliked being imposed upon. One man, however, had in some way impressed Mr. Field with his deserts, had a check for 30 days for $25, relates Youth's Companion.

He had gone far from Mr. Field's memory, but remained on the list. The pension made him quite "an elegible party" in the circle in which he moved, and at last he yielded to the blandishments of his landlady, an elderly, prosperous widow, and married her.

"Now, Henry," she said to him next day, "we'll just be having your pay raised. You can't keep two as easily as you can one. Mr. Field is a rich man, and he will understand that. You go down and tell him you need $50 a month now."

Away went Henry, and after much argument and persuasion obtained access to the inner office of the great merchant, where he stated his case.

Mr. Field became interested at once.

"A widow, eh?" he inquired, smiling. "Did she ask you—or you her?"

"Well, sir," stammered Henry, "I guess she did lead up to it."

"How old is she?"

"About 40, sir."

"Did she support herself?"

"Yes, sir. She has a big boarding house. I boarded with her. I do yet, in fact."

"Ah, yes," said Mr. Field. "So you want a raise, do you? Let me see—how much was your pension? Twenty-five dollars? Well, you won't have to pay any board now, so suppose we make it $12.50? That will keep you in spending money."

TURKS' CRUELTY TO HORSES

Prefecture of the Ottoman Capital Will Take Steps to Restrain It.

A laudable decision has been arrived at by the prefecture of the Ottoman capital, with the view of protecting horses from misuse and ill-treatment, says the Constantinople correspondent of the London Lancet. The Turks are, on the whole, very kind to animals, and shield them from injury by every possible means. At almost every Turkish house in Stamboul there is to be found a small receptacle where water is poured in every day for the use of the innumerable street dogs. A Mussuman, building his dwelling place, rarely forgets to attach some contrivance for sheltering birds, pigeons, sparrows, etc.

I am assured that a cabman who overruns a dog, heedlessly enjoying its dolce far niente in the middle of the street, has to pay a fine of several piastres, while the sultan is believed to spend a large sum on the feeding of the numerous canine scavengers around his kiosks and palaces. There are, however, a good many employers of horse labor who use their animals in a cruel or thoughtless manner.

To prevent this the employment of senile, debilitated or diseased horses has been forbidden. Municipal agents will have difficulty in Constantinople in insuring that the measure is strictly adhered to—that the load never exceeds the amount proportionate to the horse's strength, and so on—but, anyhow, the spirit which has influenced the new enactment is laudable.

WANTED MINOR DETAILS.

The Audience Was Sympathetic and Interrogated the Able Lecturer.

The lecturer was talking on the "Influence of Surroundings."

"There was an Englishman," he said, "who went to Australia and sought his fortune in the bush. He was quite alone and yet every night before he ate his frugal meal he put on evening clothes so that he would remember he was a gentleman."

"One moment," said a thin voice in the back part of the room. "I would like to ask if the gentleman wore a dinner coat with convention swallowtails?"

Before the startled lecturer could reply another questioner faced him. "Kindly let us know," said this new seeker for information, "if the Englishman wore a black or white tie."

The lecturer gasped.

"Another thing," said a third questioner, "did the gentleman affect jewelry, and if so, were his shirt studs pearls or roman gold?"

Then a fourth man arose.

"Were his patent leathers laced or buttoned?" he shouted.

The fourth man was thrust aside by the fifth.

"Were his cuffs round-cornered, or did he wear a crush hat?" he followed.

"And spats" screeched the sixth man.

And in the confusion which followed this last query the lecturer took his hat and fled.

Frenchman's Queer Steed.

It is reported from Paris that a ingenious inhabitant of Monthucon, France, has tamed a wild bear, which he caught young in the forest, and now drives it in a small gig or "chaise," with intense gratification and enjoyment. The animal between shafts is said to appear more eccentric than stylish.

A Difference.

What constitutes a good dog in the show is vastly different from that which makes a good dog in the field.

At almost every Turkish house in Stamboul there is to be found a small receptacle where water is poured in every day for the use of the innumerable street dogs. A Mussulman, building his dwelling place, rarely forgets to attach some contrivance for sheltering birds, pigeons, sparrows, etc.

I am assured that a cabman who overruns a dog, heedlessly enjoying its dolce far niente in the middle of the street, has to pay a fine of several piastres, while the sultan is believed to spend a large sum on the feeding of the numerous canine scavengers around his kiosks and palaces. There are however, a good many employers of horse labor who use their animals in a cruel or thoughtless manner.

To prevent this the employment of senile, debilitated or diseased horses has been forbidden. Municipal agents will have difficulty in Constantinople in insuring that the measure is strictly adhered to—that the load never exceeds the amount proportionate to the horse's strength, and so on—but, anyhow, the spirit which has influenced the new enactment is laudable.

WANTED MINOR DETAILS.

The Audience Was Sympathetic and Interrogated the Able Lecturer.

The lecturer was talking on the "Influence of Surroundings."

"There was an Englishman," he said, "who went to Australia and sought his fortune in the bush. He was quite alone and yet every night before he ate his frugal meal he put on evening clothes so that he would remember he was a gentleman."

"One moment," said a thin youth in the back part of the room. "I would like to ask if the gentleman wore a dinner coat with conventional swallowtails?"

Before the startled lecturer could reply another questioner faced him.

"Kindly let us know," said this new seeker for information, "if the Englishman wore a black or white tie."

The lecturer gasped.

"Another thing," said a third questioner, "did the gentleman affect any jewelry, and if so, were his shirt studs pearls or roman gold?"

Then a fourth man arose.

"Were his patent leathers laced or buttoned?" he shouted.

The fourth man was thrust aside by the fifth.

"Were his cuffs round-cornered, and did he wear a crush hat?" he bellowed.

"And spats" screeched the sixth man.

And in the confusion which followed this last query the lecturer took his hat and fled.

Frenchman's Queer Steed.

It is reported from Paris that an ingenious inhabitant of Monthucon, in France, has tamed a wild boar, which he caught young in the forest, and now drives it in a small gig or "boar chaise," with intense gratification and enjoyment. The animal between shafts is said to appear more eccentric than stylish.

A Difference.

What constitutes a good dog in a show is vastly different from that which makes a good dog in the house.

FLOWERS FED ON DRUGS.

Medical Potions Administered to Plants to Force Their Growth.

Experiments in the horticultural department of Cornell university are said to have demonstrated the fact that plants can be forced to grow with the aid of drugs, and can be made to mature in far less time than it takes to develop naturally, says the Indinapolis State. The plants are fed on ether or other medical potion for 24 or 36 hours, until they are thoroughly permeated with the fumes. Then they grow with the greatest rapidity. Easter lilies treated thus have put out magnificent blooms in a night, and narcissus flowers have doubled their size after a few hours treatment.

Could anything be more dreadful? Could there be any more effective way of destroying the sentiment that belongs to flowers? As it is now, the forcing process of the hothouse, which increases the size of blossoms, but adds correspondingly to the natural fragility, and in many cases lessens their original fragrance, takes something from the spiritual charm that belongs by right to those "stars that in earth's firmament do shine," and that everyone feels in some measure.

"Flowers are words that even a child may understand," says a poet; and George Eliot asks: "Is there not a soul beyond utterance, half nymph, half child, in those delicate petals which glow and breathe about the centers of deep color?" Flowers have a language of love and hope and cheer; they "preach to us if we will hear."

COLLEGE YELLS EMBALMED

Canned "Rah-Rahs" Would Be a Great Treat a Few Centuries Hence.

Some thoughtful Austrian has induced the Imperial Acadamey of Sciences of that empire to secure phonographic records of the numerous languages and dialects of Austria-Hungary, these records to be canned and sealed, as it were, for the enlightenment and delectation of future generations. The idea was so good that the academy has seen fit to extend it. Examples of languages and music have been secured in New Guinea and in certain sections of India. A party of scientists equipped for this research was sent to Australia last summer and another party is to start for Greenland at an early date. All these records are transferred to special archive phonographs and carefully stored away.

While the field for this form of collecting is widening, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, it might be pertinently suggested that the American college yells should be included in these interesting archives. To some people the vigorous "rah-rahs" and other exuberant syllables in use by the young collegians would prove fully as interesting as the heathenish gutterals and tomtoming of the New Guinea savages, or the Sanskrit chants of the Hindustanese. So let the addition be made as complete as possible, with due cognizance of the "Hoo-rah ki-rah!" of our own Case school and the "O Sketlio!" of our Western Reserve.

OLD-TIME PIANO PLAYING.

Not Much Like the Pace That Is Set by the Players of To-Day.

In these infant days of the twentieth century the pianist stands next to the singer among the princes of the musical world, writes W. J. Henderson, in the Atlantic. But it was not always so. The singer was the first to mount the public throne and reign with the specter of sweetened sound. Next came the violinist, and after him the virtuosi of wind instruments. Early concert programmes show the names of singers, but not of manipulators of the keyboard.

The concert pianist of to-day, sweeping the keyboard of his grand and the heart strings of his hearers with sinewy hands, emerged slowly from the humble state of a poor dependent, creeping with anxious offerings to the door of his princely patron. It was not till almost the middle of the eighteenth century that the performance of solo feats on the harpischord began to attract public attention and to form the substance of concerts.

Women Grape Pickers.

The women of the grape pickers are picturesque in California. There is just a dash of Indian to give color to the cheek, a touch of Spanish, and just a suspicion of the old blood that built the wonderful cities ages ago in lower Mexico, making a combination attractive to the lover of the picturesque. Dark hair, flashing black eyes, intelligent faces, perfect courtesy, intelligence that but needs suggestion to lead to higher grades, indeed, one could not look at these pickers, these cholos, as the tenderfoot called them, picking grapes to see that it required but clothes and environment to make a remarkable change.—Charles Frederick Holder, in the Outing Magazine.

Will Carry 4,150 Passengers.

The Kaiserin Auguste Victoria has a length of over 700 feet and is 78 feet beam. She will carry 550 passengers in first class, 350 in second class, 300 in third class, and 2,300 in her steerage, so that with her crew of 650 officers and men she will have room for 4,150 souls. Her cargo holds will have a capacity of 16,000 tons of freight.

Too Often Succeeds.

The more desperate, abandoned and notorious the criminal the harder his lawyer always works to turn him loose on society again.—Chicago Tribune.

WOMEN WHO LIKE TO STAND

Street Car Conductor Says They Do It to Keep Their Clothes Unwrinkled.

By the time the car reached Fortieth street there were no fewer than a dozen vacant seats, but the girl in the new tailor-made gown refused to avail herself of their hospitality, relates the New York Press. The messenger boy pointed them out to her. So did the woman in blue and the man with the red beard, but to all invitations to make herself comfortable the tailored girl said: "No, I thank you. I get off soon," and continued to lurch backward and forward in the middle of the car.

The conductor watched her grimly. "I could have told those folks it was no use to try to make that girl sit down," he said to a passenger on the platform. "She never does. I used to try to get her to rest herself for a minute or two, just for a change, but I never could do it. She has been riding in my car pretty regularly for about a year, and no matter whether the passengers are many or few seldom have I seen her sit down. I used to wonder why she chose to stand up and flop around that way, but I have come to the conclusion that she does it because her clothes fit so well.

"I have seen lots of other people with the same trick. When I find a woman who insists upon standing in a car where there are vacant seats, I look at her clothes, and it turns out, nine times in ten that she has a good figure and a dress that wouldn't show a wrinkle under a microscope."

OLDEST BODY OF HUMAN.

Remains of a Man Who Is Thought to Have Lived at Least 5,000 B. C.

The oldest body of any human being now reposes in the Egyptian gallery of the British museum, says the American Antiquarian. It is the body of a man who was buried in a shallow grave hollowed out of the sandstone on the west bank of the Nile in Upper Egypt. This man must have hunted along the banks of the Nile before the time of the earliest mummied king which the museum possesses—before the time of Menes, who was supposed to have ruled Egypt at least 5,000 B. C. There were previous to that time two prehistoric races, one the conquerors, and the other the conquered, from which sprang the Egyptian race of the earliest dynasties. It is with these remote stocks that this man has to do.

Considering the condition in which he was found, it is evident that he was associated with the late period of the new stone age of Egypt. He was buried in a characteristic neolithic grave, with his neolithic pots and instruments of flint about him. There is, of course, no inscription of any kind on the pots, knives or grave, all having been made long before the invention of any written language.

SKILL IN TYPEWRITING.

Speed That Exceeds That of Many of the Most Expert Stenographers.

The astonishing dexterity which the modern virtuosi of the typewriter possess was shown in the Chicago contest in which the winner wrote 4,627 words in 30 minutes, an average speed of 154 words a minute, says the Springfield Republican. This is a brisk pace even for shorthand work, and many professional stenographers have worked years without attaining a 150-word speed. But the character of the test makes a great difference, for it is one thing to rattle off a repeated sentence on a memorized passage and quite another to deal with new matter, especially if the vocabulary is not very simple.

There are many kinds of type writing where the fastest expert would have to feel his way along at a paltry 40 words a minute or so. It must be remembered, too, that the second half-hour must be slower than the first, and the second hour slower still. Racing speeds must not be taken as a basis for steady work.

Moreover, the matter of accuracy is even more important than that of speed. There should have been a special medal for the young woman who, though she finished but fourth, made only 52 errors in 4,085 words.

Valuable Glass.

When is glass worth more than gold? When it is the lense of a microscope. The record increase in value of the manufactured article over the raw material is probably made by this variety of glass, which multiplies itself 50,000,000 times. The front lens of a micro-objective costing about $5 weighs no more than about .0017 of a gramme, hence the value of such lenses to the weight of a kilogramme would be about $3,000,000. The cost of making this weight of glass is three to six cents, and thus when worked up into the shape of a lens the glass has increased in value about 50,000,000 times.

His Periodical.

They stood on the old porch watching the red full moon climbing over the water.

"Dear me!" said the girl. "I wonder why the moon is always redder when it is full."

"Sh'!" whispered the tall young chap at her side. "That is just the man in the moon's nose that we see."—Columbus Dispatch.

Lengthy Painting.

When the effects of the Olympia, London, were sold by auction the other day, the auctioneer could get for a panorama of the Mediterranean, a mile long, which had cost more than $35,000, an offer of only $105.

FRENCH INDUSTRIAL ARTS.

The Application of Higher Training to Trade Is Everywhere Apparent.

Consul Goldschmidt, of Nantes, contributes an extended article on industrial art education in France and its influence upon French industries. He says in part:

"There are at present in France, aside from the national art schools, 300 provincial and municipal schools of fine arts, which are free to young men and women. While leaving to each school the development of the line of art suited to local needs, the state gives direction by annual visits of inspectors of drawing. The application to trade is practical and complete. The 'administration of fine arts' selects and sends the greater part of the models useful to instruction, gives prizes, scholarships, purses and encouragement to pupils who have distinguished themselves during their course of studies. The influence of artistic training upon the industries of France is paramount, and the ordinary observer is struck at once when examining an article in the French shops of home manufacture of its superiority over similar goods made in other countries. If one visits an art gallery or a museum in France on Sunday, the great interest of the working people may be witnessed in the arts and sciences. A conversation with these workers reveals a general interest of the masses in matters of art and its general application."

CATHEDRAL IN ICE AT SEA

Marvelous Spectacle Witnessed by Sailors Off the Bank of Newfoundland.

An iceberg that resembled a huge cathedral dazzled the passengers of the Scandinavian-American steamship Hellig Olav when that vessel was passing the Bank of Newfoundland recently, reports the New York American.

The Hellig Olav at the time was cutting her way through a calm sea under a cloudless sky. The sun shining on the domes, spires and pinnacles of the iceberg rendered it a marvelous spectacle. It appeared off the starboard bow, not more than a mile away. It was fully 200 feet long, but the main body of the great mass of crystal was not more than 50 feet high. Above this rose what resembled a dome of ice, what might be termed the roof of the berg. There were scores of spires and needle-like points pointing upward.

So greatly did the form of the berg resemble a cathedral that one passenger remarked that he almost expected to hear the chimes sound.

The berg reflecting the rays of the setting sun in a thousand glittering points remained in sight until nightfall, fading astern to a small dot that was brought into relief through marine glasses.

ROMANS AS SHOW GOERS.

Something of Interest for Modern Lovers of the Drama to Ponder.

Just how the ancient Romans went to the theater and what kind of shows were billed in the days of Augustus and Nero was explained by Prof. Walton B. McDaniel in a free public lecture at the University Museum of Science and Art yesterday afternoon.

The audience heard with some surprise that the political lights of Rome, the senators, got the choice seats, the aristocrats sat next, then came the husbands and wives and last of all, way up in the "peanut" gallery, sat the women who came without escorts. The lecturer also told that married men got better seats than single men and that boys were seated under the view of their pedagogues.

In describing the big theater built by Pompey the Great he startled his hearers by declaring that in the fine art of handling the masses "Dick" Croker was a child compared to the late Pompey. The lecture was illustrated with numerous lantern slides.

SAXONY TRAINS OFFICIALS.

Practical Methods Employed in Germany to Give Leaders Educational Training.

Consul Harris, of Chemnitz, develops another of the great practical methods Germany is using to give her future helmsmen the most thorough educational training. He writes:

"A number of young assessors, who have practically completed their law studies, have been delegated to spend from six months to a year in some of the large business and manufacturing establishments in Chemnitz, Leipzig and Plauen. The manufacturers are satisfied at the step and gladly welcome the young men, for the reason that they are interested directly and indirectly in improving the state service, so that affairs pertaining to trade and industries will receive more appreciative attention in the future. My informant has one of these young men in his office now. His duties are to learn the routine of trade work. The methods of manufacture will be taken up later on, and thereafter the manner in which goods are exported to foreign countries."

Sidewalks of France.

Huge stone slabs suitable for sidewalk construction are seldom encountered in France, and asphalt walks are equally rare. The popular material is a cement block, which is cheap, durable and satisfactory. These blocks are made in a variety of shapes and colors, and in their more expensive forms are much used in interior work.

BOY WHO WILL GET ALONG

Small Vender of Newspapers Who Knows How to Attract Patrons.

That embryonic merchants are to be found among the newsboys of Philadelphia, says the Philadelphia Record, was revealed in the following dialogue with one of the craft, who is particularly bright and alert, while, as has been found by several men who are his patrons, is also scrupulously honest:

"Give me a paper, son."

"Yes, sir; here you are, sir. Never mind the money, sir; you can give me that at another time."

"Why, how can you do business in that way? You don't know me. How do you know you'll ever get your money?"

"Oh, I know you; I see you every day and have been waiting to get you to buy a paper."

"Well, I've bought one. What now?"

"Now I want you to buy one every day; won't you, sir? You need not pay me when you buy it. I'd rather you paid me every Saturday; will you, please, sir?"

"Of course, I will, my little man."

"Thank you, sir. Good-by."

"Good-by."

Here was enacted an incident that showed the true commercial instinct, and the man was not slow to see it and encourage it. He insists that he will follow up that boy's career and do whatever he can to promote his interests.

BIG EARNINGS OF STUDENTS

Pupils of Chicago University Pay Way Through School with Wages.

More than $137,000 is received annually by students earning a part or all of their way through the University of Chicago, according to a bulletin just issued by the university.

The work is divided as follows: Fellowships, $24,200; scholarships and prizes $35,000; university service, $14,950; other service in the university, $10,000; students' fund society, $3,000; outside employment, $50,000, making a total of $137,150.

Work obtained during the autumn quarter, 1905, through the university employment bureau, was as follows:

Work for room and board, 20 students, wages, $888.

Work for board, 35 students, wages, $1,239.

Work in post office, 24 students, wages, $2,924.50.

Work in department stores, 125 students, wages $3,668.

Work for newspapers, 11 students, wages $561.

Work for telephone company, ten students, wages $1,007.40.

In addition to these positions many odd jobs, as clerical work, typewriting, house work, tutoring, collecting and canvassing, were secured.

WAS NOT ON EXHIBITION.

Ardent Admirer of Noted Actress Made a Most Singular Request.

Miss Julia Marlowe is so unusually gracious in yielding to the many demands that are made upon her time and patience, in the way of autographs, photographs, interviews and the like, that there is small wonder she is not more frequently imposed upon than she is. Occasionally, however, there come remarkable requests at which even her good nature draws the line, says Success Magazine.

Not long ago, while she was playing in Chicago, she received a note containing a plea so startling as to be almost incredible, and which was so amusing as to send her into gales of laughter. It was from a feminine vocal teacher of the windy city who stated that she laid great stress on her work, upon the formation of the throat in both the speaking and the singing voice, holding that certain positions of the vocal cords are requisite for producing full, mellow tones. She went on to say that she had long been an ardent admirer of Miss Marlowe's voice, and requested that, as a special privilege, she be allowed to bring her class of young lady pupils to visit the actress and let them look down her throat!

On Tipping the Hat.

New Yorkers still cling to the ancient custom of tipping their hats when greeting a male friend or acquaintance. It is a common sight to a staid, prosperous looking business man as he passes an acquaintance tipping his hat, although the other is alone, and unaccompanied by a woman. It is the same after a party has been together somewhere, at dinner probably, or at the theater. You will notice that as one separates himself from the others he will say good-night, or au revoir, and then tip his hat. Also, when one man is introduced to another, it is dollars to a subway ticket that he will lift his chapeau. Wonder why it is? They don't do it in Pittsburg?—Pittsburg Dispatch.

"Cash on Delivery" Eyes.

The expression of the British woman of the day is altogether different from that of her predecessors. The British woman of 30 years ago had, generally, a most gentle, kind expression, while there is a cold cash on delivery look in the eyes of most of our women to-day.—London Truth.

VETERANS IN SEA SERVICE

Officers on the Retired List Who Have Lived Past the Four-Score.

Although the naval service offers abundant opportunities to escape the pains of longevity, there are a great number of officers borne upon the retired list who are octogenarians. One rear admiral, George Beal Balch, retired, has 59 years' service to his credit, having entered the navy in 1837. Next in seniority is Rear Admiral Aaron Hunkle Hughes, who was appointed a midshipman in 1838.

The officer who has the longest sea service is Rear Admiral Stephen B. Luce, who was on sea duty 33 years and one month, and entered the service in 1841. He retains the distinction of being the best sailor man in the navy, and his book on seamanship, first edition 1857, is still the text book at Annapolis for the handling of ships under sail. There will be no more sailors like Luce. There are some 170 retired officers who joined the navy more than 50 years ago, mostly those retired as rear admirals, but some of them holding the old grade of commodore or of captain, who have not been to sea for more than 50 years. Such a one was Capt. Francis Lowry, who recently died at Burlington, Vt. He had been retired as a midshipman from wounds received in the Mexican war after one year's service in 1847. He was promoted on the retired list to the grade of captain and was the last officer who had the advantage of promotion under the old law.

With reference to sea duty, Luce's service is some 13 years in excess of any officer in the navy. Admiral Dewey has had but 16 years and seven months. The next length of sea service is Rear Admiral Samuel R. Franklin, retired, whose sea service sums up 26 years.

FRENCH COIN POPULAR.

Formerly Unpopular, But Now the Most Sought After of Mint Productions.

If M. Poincarre, the new French minister of finance, does nothing else, he will at least go down in history with the reputation of having made the exceedingly unpopular 25-centime nickel coin the most sought after product from the French mint. The coin has long been boycottel by shopkeepers, and it has been as hard to get rid of in Paris as foreign coppers. The other day, however, a rumor emanated from the ministry of finance that on five coins of the unpopular issue might be found the word "Rothschild" in tiny letters, and that the first person who took one of these five coins to Rothschild's bank in the Rue Laffitte would receive 25,000f., or $5,000, for it; 10,000f. would be paid for the second nickel, 5,000f. for the third and fourth, and 2,000f. for the last of the five.

Why Rothschild should offer this gratuituos lottery was explained on the ground that the banker had a large stock of nickels on hand which he was anxious to get rid of as quickly as possible. Now everybody in Paris grabs every 25-centime nickel coin within reach, carefully examines it under a magnifying glass, and then passes it on to other eager hands.

ISLE OF MAN IN REVOLT.

Manx Legislature Threatens to Act Independently of the Imperial Government.

Hall Caine's fellow-Manxmen secured a representative constitution from the British imperial government in 1866, and imperial interests have since been looked after by a deemster and vicar general appointed by the home office. The house of keys, or lower branch of the Manx legislature, says the New York Times, has always been opposed to such appointments, and now its radical wing threatens to deprive the imperial government of any hand at all in the administration of Manx affairs, with the exception of a nominal wield of the British scepter.

A significant note from the British home office was recently read in the house of keys. It "requested and required" the loyalty of Manxmen to the constitution of 1866, and added that the British government could not consider for a moment the question of home rule for the Isle of Man, as such an autonomous situation was a menace to imperial interests. Moreover, continued agitation would only lead to one thing—the abrogation of the constitution and complete annexation.

Mystery of Chinatown.

"Where do the Chinese women of Chinatown keep themselves?" asked a curious one. "I have been visiting the quarter at different times of night and day for several years. I have eaten at least a hundred meals in the Chinese restaurants and been in most all the shops, the theater, the joss house and the mission, but I have yet to lay my eyes on a Chinese woman. Once in awhile a Chinese boy or even a baby done up in oriental garments is seen on Pell or Mott street, but the poor women are evidently kept pretty close. In such quarters and with no fresh air it's a wonder they live at all.—N. Y. Press.

TO UNION MEN.

The coming week we expect to publish the "Address to Voters" that was arranged for at the joint conference of the Populist and Republican committees. We intend to get out some extra copies of this issue, and we respectfully urge every friend and patron of The Union to send us at once the names and postoffice address of such of their good neighbors as are not at present subscribers to YOUR paper. Then we will send a cample copy to your neighbor and thus SHOW him what he is missing by not taking his county NEWSPAPER. Our regular weekly circulation now is nearly 1,300 copies. Just think what a boost it would give YOUR paper if each one of you would send in only one new subscriber. Try it, won't you? Frank Goodgame, one of the candidates for sheriff, has brought in fifteen subscriptions in the last two weeks, which shows that he realizes that a paper like The Union is the medium through which to talk to the people of his county, and that this paper is the only way in which the people can keep posted as to the doings of the people's cause.

ABOUT ASSESSING YOUR LAND.

To the People of Chilton County:

Well, there has been confusion upon top of confusion about taxes the past year, and yet there is something like 60,000 acres of land in Chilton county that is not assessed for 1906. I cannot for my life understand why the people do not assess their land. As you will find in this issue of The Union the notice that the tax book for 1906 is now in the Probate office ready for inspection, I hope that those who are not sure that their land is correctly listed will come and see about it, and so keep it from being advertised next year. I am sure that the 60,000 acres that are not assessed this year belong to some one. There is a large amount of land that will be sold June 25 if it is not looked after. Some people think they have assessed their land when they have not. Take your deeds and compare them with your assessment; and compare your deeds with the advertisement in The Union and see if any of your land is advertised. Remember that the tax sale will occur June 25. I write this letter hoping that it will cause the people to look after their land and keep it from being sold. Respectfully,

L. H. REYNOLDS.

HURRAH FOR GOODGAME.

Hurrah for Goodgame! He is one of the true blues, one that has been tried and not found wanting. Come on, boys, and let's put him in; he is made out of the right stuff and will make us a good sheriff. He served as United tSates marshal for quite a while, so he has had some experience along the line of sheriff's work. And Frank has stood by the People's Party all the time, and he deserves it; so let's put him in the harness and work him a while, for he is a true worker for the People's Party.

BEAT 9 VOTER.

LETTER FROM LEE HAYES.

Clanton, Ala., June 14, 1906.

Editor Union:

Kindly permit me to say, through your paper, to the voters who participate in the people's primary election, that I do not expect to make a house to house canvass, as I am well known to the people of Chilton county. If I am elected sheriff, I will discharge the duties of the office to the best of my ability. Should I be defeated in the primary election I hereby pledge myself to vote for and to use all my influence in behalf of the election of the successful candidate in the primary, let him be who he may. Very respectfully, LEE HAYES.

CLANTON.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space to say a few words to the Republicans and Populists. I notice that several candidates have announced for sheriff, and have heard several more spoken of. The friends of Lee Vickers, Jim Grant and Will Barnett seem to be anxious for them to come out. Whether any more come out or not, the people can get them a goo dsheriff anyway. We voters should look forward and get us a good sheriff, for I tell you all there is a lot depending on him. When a candidate comes to see me I'm going to ask him if he takes the Banner, and if he says yes, I'm going to tell him that he is taking bad medicine, and that it may not set well with him in the long run. It tickled me when I saw that Judge Reynolds had made the Bannerman, or his pet (who claims to be a Republican and votes the Democratic ticket) take their lie back. If everybody would do that the Banner would be reduced down to nothing but sure cure for piles, etc. I notice that "Paw's Boy" speaks of Hon. J. Osmond Middleton for representative. He would sure make a good one; so would A. C. Smith, W. R. Jackson, J. W. G. Kicker or J. H. Thomas—any would be all right. I want to say this to the candidates (all of them): Gentlemen, you all ought to think over the matter before you announce, and if you don't think you can vote for the other fellow, if he should get the nomination, you ought to stay out of the race. Isn't it funny to see Adams going around telling the people that they ought to "come together," give the Democrats two offices and take two? Would we be big fools to give two offices away when we can get them all. Oh! we can't give them away. It is true we've got them, but the people gave them by their votes; not like the Democrats do in the counties where they have control. The offices of this county will be filled with Republicans and Populists or some of both. If I could just get my name up like "Just a Voter" has his, I'd run for Commissioner of Agriculture, if I had not lived in this state but two minutes and a half. Mr. Editor, I'm truly glad to see so many good men in other counties denouncing the so-called Democracy, and joining the good old Republican party.

A REPUBLICAN.

FROM D. H. GENTRY.

To the Voters of Chilton County:

As I have announced myself as a candidate for Sheriff, and as there are many others out for the same office, and as there has been something said about the loyalty of some one of the other candidates, and as I want to say that I believe every word of it, I think Mr. Fitts is a true Populist and a good man as far as I know, but I think there could have been as much said for me, but the people were only asked to read my letter and judge for themselves, but that is all right. I wish to say to the people that I wish you would ask L. B. Pounds and J. Bice who stood by them on the night of the last election, when the box of Beat 9 was about to be thrown out. And then ask R. H. Bean who stood by him the same night, when he expected the box to be taken away from him. And ask Judge Reynolds who he found standing for the people's rights on the same night when he came to Thorsby. And then let the people say whether or not I have stood loyal to the party or not. Now, let me say that I think that I have ever stood by the party when everything looked dark and gloomy, but I only did this because I felt it my duty as a loyal man, as every man ought to do. Well, I want to say to the people that some of the other candidates may have the advantage of me, as I am a poorman and a farmer, and have to plow, for I can't get out now to canvass without stopping my plow, but will say to the people, don't pledge yourselves until we all get around, and then pick your man and shoot at him. So I will close with best wishes to The Union and its readers. Respectfully,

D. H. GENTRY.

FROM M. A. KILLGORE.

Editor Union:

A few words to the people of Chilton county, and oblige. Gentlemen, it was against my will that I consented to my name being put before the people this time, because I told the people two years ago that I would not ask the people for anything else. But some of as good friends as I have in the county insisted on me letting them announce myself as a candidate for Representative, and after they saw some of my neighbors and they agreed to stand by me, I consented to it, but I shall hold my word good, for I think more of my word than I do of the office, so I don't ask for it. It is with the people to decide. I will not put on my fighting clothes till the ticket is made. Then you that will cry me down before the primary can count on old M. A. doing as much for the ticket as any man. I have always done it, and I am getting too old to take up bad habits. Now, gentlemen, you need not think because I don't make a canvass before the primary that I would not appreciate anything that you may see fit to do for me. I would appreciate anything done for me if it be ever so much or little. Yours for success, MOSES A. KILLGORE.

CALERA.

On account of the sickness of myself and the continued illness of my better half, I've failed for several weeks to write The Union, and even now have but little to relate. Calera and vicinity has had fine farming weather, and crops and gardens, though small, are looking well and clean. Plenty of vegetables and fruit in the market. James Littleton is getting out the timbers for his ginnery, which, he says, will be of the latest and most improved style, and the very best machinery to be had in the county. I haven't seen it myself, but hear that Charlie Johnson, late of the Reynolds place in Chilton, has the finest prospect for a good crop on the Oliver farm that has been for many years. Mr. Johnson moved to this neighborhood last winter, and told his fellow farmers he would be ahead of all of them, and from the present outlook his prediction will prove true Politics is moving up now as the primary draws near, but no one, of either party, has found courage to announce for the legislature in this county, but candidates for every other office are sending out circulars and cards, asking the people, "the dear people," for support VETERAN.

LIBERTY HILL.

Dear Editor:

It has been a good while since I've sent in anything. I'm glad to see so many good pieces in The Union from all parts of the county, especially the letters from "Just a Voter" and Mr. Fonville. I think if I was S. M. A. I'd go away back and sit down and keep quiet. Sunday was preaching day here and we had an excellent sermon, good singing and a large crowd. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Maddox, of Wylam, are visiting here this week. J. H. J. and H. C. M. were at Lomax Sunday.

"TIGE."

LIBERTY HILL.

There is some sickness in these parts, but we hope it will soon pass away. The long wished for rain has come at last, but it found some oats down in the field. Rev. A. L. Foshee filled his regular appointment here Sunday, and was cheered by amens. Miss Lillie Mims was the welcome guest of Miss Dovie Smith Sunday. The Misses Abbie Lowery, Dovie Roper, Carrie Littlejohn and Bessie Ellis were welcome guests of the Misses Cynthia and Lucinda Littlejohn Sunday. James Williams and his charming sister, Miss Neoma, visited W. D. Z. Foshee's family Sunday. W. G. C. went up the red hill Sunday. S. W. has found a new road to travel. J. W. J. went in a different direction than usual Sunday evening. I learn there is a new saw mill going in near here on the Clanton and Jemison road. It is being put down by Charlie Robinson, and will be known as the Jackson & Jones mill. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Maddox, of Wylam, are visiting the latter's parents. Best wishes to The Union and its editor. "HOWDY."

SOUTH BESSIE.

Everything lovely. Beautiful crops. Prof. Walker is teaching at the Freeman school house. Had preaching here Sunday by S. N. Waldrup. Subject, "The coming judgments of Jehovah incidental to a change in the government of earth." Then in the afternoon had a good talk by J. C. Edwards, of Mulberry, on the subject of how we know the Bible is true. In addition was held a service of prayer and testimony. Mrs. Samantha Waldrup continues in feeble health. E. Z. Nix and daughter went to Cox's Chapel Sunday. Z. J. Jones and family visited friends near Oakley's Switch on the 10th. They report a nice time, and found The Union popular away up there. So Mr. Adams proposes to spread old-time Democracy. We hope he will not spread the kind that existed in Alabama when we elected Mr. Adams Commissioner of Agriculture. Talk about a revival of Bryanism. Why, we don't think the American people will ever throw away present prosperity for Mr. Bryan. No prospect of that. We may see the rise of socialism, but Democracy no more. The world is moving too fast to go back to back numbers, because "onward moves the great eternal in the order of His plan." Yours for progress, truth and the people,

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

ANOTHER BOOST.

Cane Creek, June 19, 1906.

Editor Union:

Well, Mr. Editor, I want to tell you and all of the readers of The Union that I went to Clanton not long since and I couldn't see the town for the houses. But in a short time J. F. Goodgame made his appearance, and he looked very much like a sheriff. And I tell you that if other parts of the county are for him like these "diggings" he will be an actual sheriff. If these "hill billies" do what they say, and they always do that, Frank will carry beat 11 by an overwhelming majority.

Yours for the people's ticket,

HILL BILLY NO. 2.

The following letter was just too late for last week's paper.—Editor Union.

HO! FOR PLEASANT GROVE.

We can have a good Sunday school, a grand wedding and a successful singing, all the same day. On Sunday morning last we had a good Sunday school. All present seemed to be interested. In the afternoon Mr. D. L. Ward and Miss Rena Wright were happily married at the home of the bride's father, Rev. J. E. Champion officiating. We wish the young couple a long and happy life, and that their only troubles may be little ones. As for the afternoon singing, it was a success, the majority of our choir were present and a number of visitors, viz., Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Nix, M. C. Crumpton, Miss Emma Hubbard, Fraizer Fitts and others, of Macedonia. The music was led by James Franklin, M. C. Crumpton and J. W. Billingsley, with M. C. Crumpton, J. A. Cleckler and Miss Ellen Thomas as organists. We say to all our visitors, we give them a hearty welcome and ask them to come again. We're exceptionally proud to hear of the grand success that the people of Mullins Hill school house are making in the Sunday school work. You all will not be surprised at that success when you hear that they have Mr. Alex Glasscock for superintendent and Miss Ada Rasco as teacher of the advanced class. As I promised, if my other letter escaped the dreaded basket, I'll drop another thought in regard to the effect of music. For instance, we enter a house of worship, still under the empire of the external world, we carry there our worldly thoughts and occupations; a thousand distractions deter us from religious reflection and meditation. The word of the preacher reaches the ear indeed, but only as a vague sound. The sense of what is said is arrested at the surface, without penetrating the heart But let the grand voice of the organ and choir be heard, and our whole being is moved; the physical world disappears, the eyes of the soul open, we bow the head and bend the knee, and our thoughts, disengaged from atter, soar to the eternal regions of the good, the true and the beautiful. So, young people, let's live for something. Do good and leave beind us a monument of virtue, that the storm of time can never destroy. Write your name in kindness, love and mercy on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with, year by year, and you will never be forgotten. Your name, your deeds will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as the stars of Heaven.

"UNCLE NED."

WEST CHILTON.

Health is not good. Some sickness around. Crops are looking fine, but our people are a few days behind in their work, though J. A. Langston has laid by his corn. We were all glad to see F. J. Fitts' announcement for Sheriff. We are all Fitts men around here, for he is a good man and will make us a good Sheriff. Come over, F. J., to see us. Tom and Will Cost, of Jemison, paid W. A. Greene a flying visit Saturday. LITTLE J.

PINEDALE.

Editor Union:

The health of this community is very good and crops are good. God has wonderfully blessed us with the showers. Rev. C. A. Milstead filled his regular appointment Saturday and Sunday at Mountain Springs. Just a word of consolation to the good people that have been caused so much trouble in regard to the new public road known as the Connell road. I know that there has been one one-horse wagon traveled that road, for I saw the wagon track where it went through the bushes, and it was just opened last winter. Cheer up, boys, it may be a road yet. Now just a word to us unfortunate beings that have to work those public roads and that sign petitions for them to be granted. I believe in having public roads and good ones, too, but I do think that we ought to well consider before we sign those petitions whether the road will be of any public benefit or not.

JUST A ROAD-HAND.

LIBERTY HILL.

Editor Union:

Please allow me the pleasure of entering again into the happy circle for a short chat. Rev. A. L. Foster preached to a large crowd here Sunday and many have said he will never beat it again. Miss Neoma Williams visited Mrs. W. D. Z. Foshee Sunday. Mrs. Henry Maddox, of Wylam, was among her many friends Sunday, and 'One Forsaken" had the pleasure of meeting her. Misses Perdita and Callie Eiland were guests of Misses Eula and Hattie Littlejohn Sunday; Walter Ward, Will Culp and Lawrence Giles were also present. Emmett Blankenship seems to be popular with our girls. Messrs. Johnnie Lowery, Ernest Sharbutt and Misses Callie Popwell and Olla Lowery attended preaching here Sunday. WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, theFather of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, theFather of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

THE PULPIT.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. WILLIAM T. BEST.

Subject: Christian Prosperity.

Remsen, N. Y.—A notable sermon, entitled "Christian Prosperity," was preached here on a recent Sunday by the eloquent divine, the Rev. William T. Best. He took for his text, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree," and said:

Look at the wonderful way in which the Holy Spirit works on a man. Just think of a man whose "throat is an open sepulchre," his "mouth full of cursing," his feet swift to shed innocent blood, his heart "deceitful and desperately wicked," "spreading himself like a green bay tree" (a tree that is good for nothing, but to keep the sunlight out of the marsh, the very place where it ought to shine), and then think of the Holy Spirit taking hold of that man, bringing him "from darkness to light," from the power of sin and Satan to God, putting a "new song" in his mouth, placing his feet in the "way of peace," taking away the "stony heart" and giving him an "heart of flesh," changing him from a hard, fruitless, good-for-nothing bay tree into an upright, useful, victorious palm tree. It is wonderful! wonderful! but that is not all,

"For God will give him all things."

Christ will never leave nor forsake him; the Holy Ghost will lead and guide him into "all truth;" the angels of Heaven will have charge concerning him to keep him in all his ways. "He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." "He shall flourish in the courts of God," he shall flourish "like the palm tree," "he shall still bring forth fruit in old age, he shall be fat and flourishing."

The palm tree is the prince of the vegetable kingdom, so named from its noble aspect; it sometimes rises one hundred feet, unbroken by branches, bearing at its summit a magnificent and graceful crown of large, fan-shaped and feathery leaves, in the shadow of which are suspended great clusters of fruit. No tree can look more lordly or beautiful. It is not, however, only beautiful, for, from the bottom of its lowest root to the top of its highest leaf, it is useful; from its leaves, baskets, bags, mats and brushes are made; from its trunk, fences, canes, poultry cages, building material and fuel are obtained, while from its fibrous webs thread is procured, which may be twisted into ropes and rigging. It furnishes food, shelter, clothing, fibre, starch, paper, wood, sugar, oil, wax, tannin, dyeing materials, resin and a host of other things, in all, making three hundred and sixty. In Egypt, Arabia and Persia many of the inhabitants subsist almost entirely on its fruit. For more than one hundred years it maintains its vigor and beauty, and "there is no more charming nor majestic sight than this king among the trees of the plain," "as it looks far away in the distance and gazes into the face of the sun, a symbol of life in the midst of a world of death."

The Christian may be compared to the palm tree in the following respects:

I. The palm tree is of humble growth, its stem being thick in proportion to its height, and is not more complicated in structure than that of the common butcher-broom. Sometimes it produces a series of adventitious roots, which thrust themselves into the soil and serve to steady it. On account of its weakness Pliny says, they will sometimes plant three or four of them together, forming one strong, lofty and beautiful tree. They were planted in the courts of the temple.

The little things of to-day are the great things of to-morrow. The Kingdom of Heaven "is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and cast into his garden; and it grew and waxed a great tree." When a man is born into the Kingdom of God, he is but a babe in Christ, and looks to those around him for help; but how often he is disappointed, and finds that they, who should be his best friends, are often his greatest foes. This teaches him the great lesson of taking his eyes off men and placing them on Christ, and by prayer and faith to reach out and take hold of the solid rock, so that when the winds of temptation and floods of doubt come, he is enabled to stand. The great privilege, however, is open to him of uniting with the Christian Church, and thus with people like himself, planted in the house of the Lord, grow up into a beautiful Christian character.

II. "The palm tree grows in the purest soil; it will not grow and flourish in filthy places like some trees." Its heart is soft and tender, and is fed by hidden springs, that flow beneath the surface of the ground. Its roots drink deep, and are sustained, while they send up the moisture into the leaves and branches, and they are refreshed and invigorated. "Its presence, travelers assure us, indicates that water is near, and may be obtained from springs, or by digging; accordingly, Israel found twelve springs and seventy palm trees at Elim."

The palm tree Christian grows in the purest soil, where the Gospel is preached in its purity. David said, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." The Saviour said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." The blessing of a "pure heart" and the blessing of holiness are one and the same thing; pure means unmixed, holiness means wholeness, both mean perfectness. God said to Abraham, "I am the Almighty God; walk thou before Me, and be thou perfect." David said, "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." Jesus said to the young ruler, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor." "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your father, which is in Heaven, is perfect." Some men say they do not believe in perfection, but "what a man believes he believes is very different from what he does believe." No man will cut the sleeve out of his coat, or the toe out of his shoe, or in buying a horse search for one that has a spavin, in order to uphold his doctrine of imperfection. He may say that a Christian cannot be perfect, and yet if he is not perfect he will talk about him all through the community. Men do believe in perfection. What kind of perfection, then, does the Bible teach? Not Adamic, nor Angelic, nor sinless, but Christian perfection. The palm tree Christian then, is a perfect Christian, an all-round man. Water is a type of the Holy Spirit; it is cleansing, refreshing and powerful. The woman of Samaria went out to get a pitcher of water, but she got a whole well instead. Often we Christians come with our little pitchers to draw water out of the wells of salvation. What we need is the palm tree idea; it is rooted and grounded in the well, and therefore has the well in it, in every fibre of its being. The palm tree Christian lives in the Spirit, walks in the Spirit, and draws his life, light and power from this secret source, or in other words, he is baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire. This opens up the way to the next heading.

III. The woody fibres produced in the interior of the palm tree are regularly pressed outwards, giving a uniformity of thickness throughout. It is therefore straight and very lofty, always growing upright, and has not failed to attract the attention of writers in every country where it is indigenous.

If the palm tree Christian is saved, sanctified and baptized with the Holy Ghost, he must work this salvation out, so that there may be a uniformity of thickness between his profession and possession. He must therefore be straight in all his dealings with the children of men. A great many Christians are in doubt as to whether their lives are straight or not; now the only way a man can tell whether he has a yard of cotton or not is to place the supposed yard of cotton alongside of the yardstick, and if the one is just as long as the other he comes to the conclusion that he has a yard of cotton. The only way a man can tell whether his life is straight or not is to place himself alongside of the Word of God. Take, for instance, the passage found in Matt. 5:44: "Love your enemies." Now someone will say: "I can forgive, but I never can forget." Well, then, you are not straight. Another will say: "I can forgive and forget, but I can—but I can never love them." Well, then, you are not straight. "Love your enemies." Someone says: "It does not mean that." A minister, while preaching, quoted the verse: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," etc., and then said: "It does not mean that, for no man can do that; but it means we are to try and do it." How would that brother like to put "try" before all the other commandments? Would he be willing next Sunday to get up before his people and say the Bible says: "Thou shalt not kill," but of course it does not mean that, for no man can live without killing; but it means you are to try and not kill. The Bible means what it says, or else it does not mean anything.

IV. The palm tree is an evergreen. "It grows slowly but steadily, uninfluenced by those alterations of the seasons which affect other trees." It does not rejoice overmuch in winter's copious rains, neither does it droop under the drought and burning sun of summer, nor can the importunate urgency of the winds sway it aside from perfect uprightness.

Someone has said there are four classes of Christians: 1st. The sleepy Christian, who wakes up to everything when it is too late. 2d. The fair weather Christian, who serves the Lord when the sun shines. 3d. The grasshopper Christian, who takes a leap every revival. 4th. The palm tree Christian, whose path is as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. One of the great troubles in the Christian Church of to-day is that there are too many grasshopper Christians who are greatly warmed up in a revival meeting, but after the meeting is over become cold and indifferent. The palm tree Christian must set his face "like a flint," for he professes to be following Christ and doing as Christ would do under every circumstance, and while it is true that everything changes, he must never change from the "highway" to the "broadway." When he is plowing and the plow-point strikes a stone, he is a Christian. When the cow gives a pail of milk and then kicks it over, he is a Christian. When he is putting up stovepipes in the fall, he is a Christian. When they are taking up the missionary collection, he is a Christian. In all places, at all times (without a single holiday, not even election day), under all circumstances, and at all costs, he is a Christian.

V. From antiquity the palm tree has been regarded as the choicest of fruit trees. It has been known to produce 600 pounds of dates in a year. "Its fruit is abundant, pleasant, medicinal and exhilarating;" "those who only know the date from the dried specimen shown beneath a label in shop windows, can hardly imagine how delicious they are when eaten fresh.' Pliny says: "When they come from the trees they are so delicious that they are eaten most greedily." It is a staple article of commerce, and a Moslem tradition says: "They are the chief of all the fruits of the world."

If the life of the palm tree Christian testifies to the fact that he is saved and sanctified, and that there is nothing more transient about it, he will not only have the fruits of the Spirit, but shall teach transgressors the ways of the Lord, and sinners shall be converted. During the last few days I have read so much about the palm tree that I have a perfect hunger for dates, and it seems as though I cannot wait until I go to town and get some.

The palm tree Christian has a hunger for souls. Moses said: "If Thou wilt not forgive their sin, blot me, I pray Thee, out of Thy book." Paul said: "He could wish himself accursed from Christ for his brethren." John Knox said: "Oh God, give me Scotland, or I die." Is there any fruit so delicious to our souls as leading others to Christ? Oh, brother, sister, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already unto harvest!" Begin to-day and gather this fruit unto life eternal.

VI. The palm tree grows under heavy weight and pressure. Naturalists say it grows when it is most pressed down. You cannot keep it down, or make it grow crooked, even if you lay heavy weights upon it.

So it is with the palm tree Christian; the more you try to keep him down, the more he grows. The Jews said, with regard to Christ: "Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that He should live!" "Crucify Him!" "Crucify Him!" "We will not have this man Christ Jesus to reign over us."

"They drove the nails into His hands,
The spear into His side,
The crown of thorns into His brow,
And they mocked Him till He died."

They smote the Shepherd and the sheep were scattered, so that from all appearances Christ and His religion were things of the past; but were they? It was not fifty days until a band of men and women were in an upper room, praying for the coming of the Holy Ghost, and when He came 3000 were converted and added to the church by the power, and the Christians went everywhere preaching the Gospel. Then said the persecutors: "Stone Stephen!" "Tie Thomas to a pillar!" "Crucify Peter!" "Throw John into a cauldron of boiling oil!" "Chop off Paul's head!" "Stop them!" "Stop them, or they will turn the world upside down!" They killed the apostles; but did they kill Christianity? Never! They might just as well try to stop the earth turning on its axis, as to prevent the coming of Christ's kingdom on earth. Christians have had their thumbs in the thumb-screws; their feet in the stocks; their lips cut off; their eyes bored out; they have been eaten by wild beasts; they have been burned at the stake; they were tortured in every conceivable manner. Women have had their children taken from them and themselves outraged. "They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheep and goat skins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy," and yet through the burning of Rome, and the Dark Ages, and the massacre of St. Bartholomew, through all the past centuries Christianity has been growing "like a cedar of Lebanon;" it is flourishing like the palm tree. This leads to our next thought.

VII. The palm tree is emblem of victory and rejoicing. The Jews employed palm branches on the feasts of tabernacles, and on festive occasions. They carried them before princes and distinguished personages, waving them in token of joy and triumph. The Egyptians waved palm branches in honor of Osirus and bore them before conquerors in their triumphs. The reason given by Plutarch why the symbol was adopted by the idolators is the nature of the wood, which so powerfully resists recumbent pressure; but more enlightened nations bear palm branches after a victory, to acknowledge the author of their success and prosperity.

Said the presiding elder to the discouraged minister, who had run away from his charge: "Have they ever spat upon you?" The minister said: "No, they have not gone that far." "Did they ever crown you with thorns?" And the minister began to weep. Then said the elder: "Who is going to reign at the end of this world?" Oh, friends! Jesus Christ has won and is going to reign until all His enemies are put under His feet. How would one of the political parties feel toward its opponents, if that party knew that the victory was won already and that all the work from now until November would be spent simply in getting its majority? The palm tree Christian has victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil; yea, even death itself. Tertullian said: "We conquer when we fall." We read such statements as the following, in connection with the death of the martyrs: "He has received the palm of martyrdom." "He has been crowned with the palm of the martyrs." St. Agatha replied to the tyrant: "If you do not rend my body upon the rack, my soul cannot enter the Paradise of God with the palm of martyrdom." There are palms upon the tombs of Caius, Tiburtius, Valerius, Mamimianus, Filumena and others. At Cawnpore, in India, there is a well, enclosed by a wall of white marble about twenty feet high and fifty-seven paces in circumference. On the stone that covers the well is inscribed these words: "Sacred to the perpetual memory of a great company of Christian people, chiefly women and children, cruelly massacred near this spot by the rebel Nana Sahib, and thrown the dying with the dead,, into the well beneath, on the 15th day of July, 1857." In the centre of the enclosure is a sculptured angel of resurrection with illumined face, and holding high two palm branches, meaning victory. To-day we remember Paul with admiration, but Nero with disgust. The future pages of history will condemn the Sultan of Turkey, but uphold the Armenian Christians. The land, which the blessed Christ has trod, shall yet become as the Garden of Eden. Jesus Christ is coming back to the earth. Oh, blessed thought!

VIII. The palm tree is a type of Heaven. The weary traveler in desert lands looks forward to the palm tree with great joy, for it promises him food and shelter overhead, and wells of water underneath. The first thing of interest in the promised land was the city of Palm Trees. It was employed in the real temple of Solomon, and in the visionary temple of Ezekiel. Both Simon and Judas Maccabes entered Jerusalem after their victories, bearing palm branches. Solomon covered all the walls of the Holy of Holies round about with palm trees to indicate its heavenly connection, and being honored by the ministration of angels.

The Christian pilgrim looks forward with joy to the time when he shall "sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the Kingdom of God," to eat of the Tree of Life and drink of the Water of Life. The Christian has a home in a city, where they need not the light of the sun, where the walls are jasper, and the streets gold, and each one of the twelve gates a pearl. A city, where there is no cemetery, for there is no sickness, pain, nor death. A city, where they need no policeman, for all is peace and perfect love. He shall have a new name, a white robe, a crown upon his brow, and better than all else, he shall have a palm in his hand. Oh, who would not be a Christian? Someone says, "Why?" Why? "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 24.

Review of the Second Quarter—Read Psalm xcvii.—Golden Text: John vii., 46—Topic: Some Great Sayings of Jesus and Their Lessons—Summaries

Lesson I. Topic: Counsels in character building. Place: The "Horns of Hattin," near the centre of the west coast of the Sea of Galilee. This lesson is a part of Christ's Sermon on the Mount. Men are known by their fruits; good trees bring forth good fruit; corrupt trees bring forth corrupt fruit; a profession of godliness is not sufficient.

II. Topic: The Lord's day. Place: In and near Capernaum. While Jesus and His disciples were walking through a field of grain on the Sabbath day the disciples plucked the grain and ate it to satisfy their hunger; the Pharisees found fault; Jesus justified their course by referring to David's act in eating the shew-bread, and to the priests who were obliged to work on the Sabbath; He healed a man with a withered hand; they would lift a sheep out of a pit on the Sabbath day, and a man is better than a sheep.

III. Topic: A great faith and a great Helper. Places: Capernaum; Nain. This miracle was performed soon after the Sermon on the Mount. A sick slave; the elders sent; the centurion's good deeds urged; Jesus went with them; friends are sent, and the centurion goes himself, to meet Jesus; he says, I am not worthy, trouble not yourself, speak the word only; Jesus says this is great faith, not found in Israel; the cure wrought at once. At Nain He met a funeral procession; a young man raised from the dead; fear fell on the people.

IV. Topic: Jesus the sinner's friend. Place: In some town of Galilee, perhaps in Capernaum. Simon, a Pharisee, invited Jesus to dine; a woman—a sinner, came in and washed, wiped, kissed and anointed His feet. Simon had failed to perform the common acts of hospitality, and Jesus now calls his attention to his coldness and lack of love; reproves him for being displeased with the woman; a parable; a question; a woman forgiven.

V. Topic: How to hear the word. Place: Near Capernaum, on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. Jesus left Peter's house and the multitudes followed Him; spoke many things in parables; this was His first one; four kinds of ground represent four classes of people; many things caused unfruitfulness. We can, by God's help, cause the soil of our hearts to be changed.

VI. Topic: Problems of good and evil in the world. Place: Near Capernaum, on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. Jesus speaks another parable. Good seed is sown, but an enemy sowed tares. Both must grow together until the harvest. Jesus explains the parable in vs. 37-39. At the end of the world those who "do iniquity" will be cast into a furnace of fire, but the righteous will "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

VII. Topic: Great facts respecting salvation. Place: On the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. After Jesus had concluded "the parables by the sea," He crossed over the Sea of Galilee to the eastern shore. Here a fierce demoniac met Him. When he saw Jesus he ran and worshiped Him; Jesus commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man; the demons entered into a herd of swine; the swine perished in the sea; the people besought Jesus to depart out of their coasts.

VIII. Topic: Lessons from the death of John the Baptist. Place: The fortress Macherus. The death of John occurred about the time the twelve returned. Herod Antipas was ruler of Galilee and Perea. When he heard of the mighty works of Christ he said John is risen. John had rebuked sin in high places.

IX. Topic: The great gospel feast. Place: Near Bethsaida. God can supply bread where it is least likely to be found. Five thousand are fed, besides women and children; twelve baskets of fragments gathered. After performing this wonderful miracle the people were about to make Jesus a king, but He would not permit it. That night He prayed nearly all night on the mountain alone, and between 3 and 6 o'clock went to His disciples, walking on the waves.

X. Topic: Bringing the unsaved to Christ. Place: On the borders of Phoenicia. Sermons on the bread of life and pollution, just delivered; the people plot against Him; Jesus and His disciples go to the borders of Phoenicia; a Gentile woman beseeches Him to cast the devil out of her daughter; Jesus replies that it is not proper to give the children's bread to dogs; she asks for the crumbs; severe tests do not discourage her; Jesus commends her faith; her request is granted and her daughter is healed.

XI. Topic: Confessing Christ. Place: Near Caesarea Philippi. Jesus asked His disciples who men said He was; some said John the Baptist, and others Elijah, Jeremiah or one of the prophets. Who do you say I am? Peter says, the Christ. Jesus blessed Peter; man had not revealed it, but the Father had; Christ is the foundation rock; gates of hades shall not prevail against His church; the keys of the kingdom of heaven given; Christ tells of His death; Peter rebukes Him; get thee behind Me, Satan; saving and losing the life; no profit to gain the whole world and lose the soul.

XII. Topic: Lessons of the transfiguration. Place: Mount Hermon. Peter, James and John go with Jesus into the mount to pray. As Jesus prays He is transfigured; Moses and Elijah appear; converse regarding His departure from the world; the disciples, fully awake, see Jesus and the two men in their glory; enter in a cloud; hear a voice; Jesus commended; alone with Jesus.

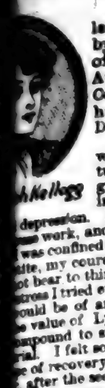
STING LETTER

BY A NOTABLE WOMAN

Kellogg of Denver, Color the Woman's Relief Corps, ite to Mrs. Pinkham.



The following letter was written by Mrs. Kellogg, of 1628 Lincoln Ave., Denver, Col., to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"For five years I was troubled with a tumor, which kept growing, causing me intense agony and depression. I was unable to attend to work, and life became a burden to me, my courage and all hope. I dreaded to bear to think of an operation, but at last I tried every remedy which I thought would be of any use to me, and knew the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to sick women decided me to make a trial. I felt so discouraged that I had no faith in it, but after the second week, thought I felt some relief; but to my surprise I found that I kept gaining, and my tumor lessened in size. I continued to build up my health and the tumor seemed to be entirely gone, and in seven months, the tumor was entirely gone and I am a well woman. I am grateful to you for my recovery that I ask you to publish my letter in newspapers, so other women may know of the wonderful curative power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Women are troubled with irregularities, painful periods, weakness, displacement or ulceration of the female organs, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation, backache, flatulence, general debility, indigestion or nervous prostration, they should remember that there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles.

No other medicine in the world has such a widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine can show a record of cures of female

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for many years under her direction and since her decease has been advising sick women free of charge. She has guided thousands to health. Address Lynn, Mass.

Weight of the World.

The world is to be weighed once more, doubts being entertained by scientists as to the accuracy of previous estimate, but whether the error be a case of short weight or over weight has yet to be settled. So an expedition is to set out to Egypt, where, strange as it sounds, the great pyramids will be utilized by the investigators. First the weight of the pyramid will be ascertained, and then the weight of the earth estimated from its proportionate size. The swinging of pendulums will be the gauge, for the pendulum is affected by the power of attraction exerted by a large or small body—a mere question of arithmetic to the man of science. From the force exerted by the pyramid in pulling the swinging pendulum from its natural course the weight of the pyramid can be estimated, and that of the earth—the exact size of which is known—can then be easily calculated.

The most gigantic of fishes is the great whale shark (Rhineodon typus). It is not uncommon in the Indian ocean, where it reaches a length of sixty feet, living lazily near the surface and rarely approaching land. With a mouth sometimes four feet wide, it has very small teeth, its food being mostly minute crustaceans.

The value of the products of the soil of the United States for several years has reached $5,000,000,000 annually, while for 1905 it was $6,315,000,000. A loss of 10 per cent on all growing crops caused by insect injuries is estimated by the netomologist of the department of agriculture, with $200,000,000 further damage to crops in storage and to our forest interests.

Where Britain Keeps Ahead.

The British are still far and away ahead of any other nation in the matter of shipbuilding. Lloyd's returns show that in 1904 the United Kingdom launched 712 ships, with a total displacement of 1,205,162 tons. Thirty-seven ships of war were also launched within the year, the tonnage being 127,175. One of these, the Caronia, has the enormous displacement of 20,000 tons, while the Victoria, of 14,000 tons, is the biggest turbine warship afloat.

England's most formidable shipbuilding rival is the United States, which launched 227 merchant ships of over a hundred tons each, the total tonnage being 238,518. Uncle Sam also launched 19 ships of war, with a total tonnage of 170,885.

Germany is third on the shipbuilding list, with 149 new merchant vessels, aggregating 200,000 tons, to her credit in 1904, besides 11 warships, with a tonnage of nearly 45,000.

Next comes France, with 80,000 tons in 67 merchantment and 43,600 tons in 9 ships of war. In ordinary times Russia might have had fifth place, but instead of her Italy enjoyed the distinction, with the modest output of 8 merchant vessels and 8 warships, with a total tonnage of 58,662.

First Newspaper Telegram.

The newspaper which received the first telegraphic report was the London Morning Chronicle, May 8, 1845. During the railway mania of 1845, a meeting of consideramle importance was convened at Portsmouth to take into consideration the respective merits of the proposed lines from London. A great desire existed to know the result of the meeting, and as it was not to take place at Porsmouth until after the last London train, recourse was had to the telegraph.

A full report of the meeting, headed "Portsmouth Lines, Communicated by Electric Telegraph," appeared in a London paper next morning. The editor called attention to the fact in the leading columns as follows: "In our article on railways will be found a report of a meeting held yesterday evening at Portsmouth which was transmitted by electric telegraph. This is the first example of the electric telegrahp being used for such a purpose and it indicates the important and numerous services which that valuable invention will soon render to the public."

A Continent of Ice.

The largest mass of ice in the world is probably the one which fills up nearly the whole of the interior of Greenland, where it has acumulated since before the dawn of history. It is believed to now form a block about 600,000 square miles in area and averaging a mile and a half in thickness. According to these statistics the lump of ice is larger in volume than the whole body of water in the Mediterranean, and there is enough of it to cover the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland with a layer about seven miles thick. If it were cut into two convenient slabs and built up equally upon the entire surface of "gallant little Wales" it would form a pile more than 120 miles high. There is ice enough in Greenland to bury the entire area of the United States a quarter of a mile deep.

WHAT JOY THEY BRING TO EVERY HOME

as with joyous hearts and smiling faces they romp and play—when in health—and how conducive to health the games in which they indulge, the outdoor life they enjoy, the cleanly, regular habits they should be taught to form and the wholesome diet of which they should partake. How tenderly their health should be preserved, not by constant medication, but by careful avoidance of every medicine of an injurious or objectionable nature, and if at any time a remedial agent is required, to assist nature, only those of known excellence should be used; remedies which are pure and wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, like the pleasant laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. Syrup of Figs has come into general favor in many millions of well informed families, whose estimate of its quality and excellence is based upon personal knowledge and use.

Syrup of Figs has also met with the approval of physicians generally, because they know it is wholesome, simple and gentle in its action. We inform all reputable physicians as to the medicinal principles of Syrup of Figs, obtained, by an original method, from certain plants known to them to act most beneficially and presented in an agreeable syrup in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to promote the pleasant taste; therefore it is not a secret remedy and hence we are free to refer to all well informed physicians, who do not approve of patent medicines and never favor indiscriminate self-medication.

Please to remember and teach your children also that the genuine Syrup of Figs always has the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package and that it is for sale in bottles of one size only. If any dealer offers any other than the regular Fifty cent size, or having printed thereon the name of any other company, do not accept it. If you fail to get the genuine you will not get its beneficial effects. Every family should always have a bottle on hand, as it is equally beneficial for the parents and the children, whenever a laxative remedy is required.

DISFIGURING SKIN HUMOR.

Impossible to Get Employment, as Face and Body Were Covered With Sores —Cured by Cuticura.

"Since the year 1894 I have been troubled with a very bad case of eczema which I have spent hundreds of dollars trying to cure, and I went to the hospital, but they failed to cure me, and it was getting worse all the time. Five weeks ago my wife bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap, and I am pleased to say that I am now completely cured and well. It was impossible for me to get employment, as my face, head and body were covered with it. The eczema first appeared on the top of my head, and it had worked all the way around down the back of my neck and around to my throat, down my body and around the hips. It itched so I would be obliged to scratch it, and the flesh was raw. I am now all well, and I will be pleased to recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all persons who wish a speedy and permanent cure of skin diseases. Thomas M. Rossiter, 290 Prospect Street, East Orange, N. J. Mar. 30, 1905."

Sec. 7 1-2. The following persons and no others, who, if their place of residence shall remain unchanged, will have, at the date of the next general election the qualifications as to residence prescribed by section 1 of this act, shall be qualified to register as electors, provided they shall not be disqualified under section 2 of this act:

Such certificate shall be issued free of charge to the elector. The Secretary of State shall, at the expense of the State furnish the Judge of Probate blank certificates for use as provided in this section.

The certificate of the registrars or the Judge of Probate or of the Secretary of State shall be sufficient to establish the fact of such registration.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Be sure and register when the registrars are in your beat, as the only excuse for not doing so is by reason of sickness of yourself or in your family or by absence from the county. Everybody can register this summer who will be qualified by residence or age by the 8th day of November. Poll tax paying has nothing to do with registration; you can register now and pay your poll tax afterwards, but you cannot vote unless you are both registered and have paid your poll tax (if any is due). The period of residence necessary to register is two years in the State, one year in the county and three months in the beat. If you have moved from one beat to another in the county less than three months before election day, you can vote in your old beat, so you don't lose your vote by changing beats. Any one who desires to register on property qualification should take with him his last assessment sheet and tax collector's receipt to show to the registrars as proof that you are possessed of such property and pay taxes on it. You can register under ANY of the following heads:

1. If you own forty acres or more land in this State, and reside upon it.
2. If your wife owns forty acres or more land in this State, upon which you reside.
3. If you own real estate in this State that is assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
4. If your wife owns real estate in this State assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
5. If you own personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
6. If your wife owns personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
7. If you can read and write any section of the constitution of the United States.

Don't give up your life certificate that you got in 1902; you only have to show it to the registrars in case you have moved to this county from some other county.

THE UNION will furnish any one information on any special points that they may be in doubt upon, and stands ready to help any one to get all the rights he is entitled to under the laws of Alabama. If you think you are entitled to register and the registrars should refuse you, take a couple of good men with you so you can have witnesses as to such refusal and the reasons given by the registrars, and thereby be enabled to take your case upto high authority. tf

LETTER FROM F. J. FITTS.

Maplesville, Ala., June 12, 1906.

To the Voters of Chilton County:

In this issue of The Union will be found my announcement for sheriff of Chilton county, subject to the action of the People's primary.

I expect to make an active canvass of the county before the primary is held, and I shall endeavor to see as many of the voters as it is practical for me to do—especially those who have pledged their allegiance to the People's cause, the cause of right and justice.

It is hardly necessary here for me to state what my political convictions are. They are proven by my works in the past. The first ballot I ever cast was for the nominee of the People's party, and the first political work I ever did was rendered in behalf of the People's party. I have never deviated from this course nor receded from the position originally taken. I have never deserted the cause of the people nor battled against it in the ranks of the enemy. When dark clouds were hovering around us and defeat seemed to be staring us in the face because of the unfaithfulness of some whom we had honored by electing them to office, my faith in the righteousness of our cause remained undiminished, and I have ever been steadfast in defending the interests of the people.

With a straight record for party loyalty behind me, and an honest purpose in view, it is with some measure of hope that I submit my claims to the determination of the people. If I am your nominee my heart will go out to you in deepest gratitude; if some other candidate receives the honor and by your votes you declare him your nominee, he shall have my unqualified support, and I pledge him my very best efforts to elect him by an overwhelming majority.

Respectfully,

tf F. J. FITTS.

Protest Against the Exaggerations of the Professional Exposers

By an Anonymous Writer.

MAY I have a few lines of your valuable space to enter a protest against the character of the current literature in this country?

Upon my return to this land, after a considerable absence, with all the enthusiasm of a true patriot, I was naturally constrained mildly to boast, to an English passenger who shared my room on the boat, of all the virtues of the "land of the free and the home of the brave." I saw the same Britisher some days later in New York city and he told me that he had been reading many of our newspapers and magazines and wanted to know if it was true that the country was in such a demoralized state. I replied that the desire for money at any cost was quite prevalent and possibly the same feeling was responsible for the sources of his impression.

Now, what I want to know is whether the editors of this country have the right to convey these impressions broadcast at the expense of national pride, name and patriotism?

What more injurious effect could be produced upon our new citizens, who arrive here with dreams of civil and social and business morals, than to find immediately confronted with the apparent "fact" that most of our statesmen, legislators, lawyers and leaders in every walk of activity are crooks, grafters and enemies of the state? The awakening must be bewildering. There is but one result, and that a process of emulation. Pride of state is immediately discarded and the sign of the dollar is forever the American Eagle.

Can we survive this ever increasing pessimism? Let us have an optimistic press, so that when one is tired and weary he can read of the commendation, and rewards of work, brains and truth, and not be exhausted with the virulent attacks upon our leading citizens and their works.

THE UNION.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL; SPECIAL FAVORS TO NONE.

VOL IV. CLANTON, ALA., JUNE 28 1906! NO. 14

The People of Chilton County.

Saturday, May 12, 1906, at the court house in Clanton, the Republican and Populist Executive Committees of this county met in join session, together with about 200 of Chilton's leading citizens. Speeches were made by several, and the entire meeting was the most harmonious and enthusiastic ever held throughout. The unanimity of purpose and the intense interest manifested at this meeting is an inevitable guide to a glorious victory of the people's cause in the coming election in our county.

A primary election was ordered by the committees to nominate candidates for the offices to be filled in this county in the November election. The sub-committee, composed of Republicans and Populists, were appointed to fix the date of the primary, appoint managers, assess candidates to defray the expenses and to do all things necessary to carry out the same so as to insure a fair expression of the voters who participate therein. It is the unqualified purpose of the sub-committee that this primary shall be managed and conducted that equal and exact justice will be done and that each candidate have a "square deal."

We admonish each and every candidate against engaging in personalities or accusations, but earnestly request each of them to conduct his campaign before the primary in such manner as to prove himself worthy to be elected to the office he seeks should he receive the nomination.

We condemn the methods and practices of the Democratic party in this county—among other things, on account of its disregard for the wishes of those who compose its rank and file. The mass meeting which the Democratic Executive Committee of this county decided to hold at its last meeting for the purpose of nominating candidates, is a delusion and a fraud upon the masses of that party. A few dictators who devised this scheme are voiced by the Banner man when he says, in commenting upon the decision of their committee to call a mass meeting: "There was no dissatisfaction at the primary, but it was conceded that the people of Chilton county should have an opportunity to nominate and elect their own officers and that in this way every white man can make his voice heard and vote felt." Note that they say, "there was no dissatisfaction at the primary." Then we ask in the name of common sense and reason, Why do they want the change? The answer is obvious that a wayfaring man, though a fool, should not err therein. The bosses have not forgotten that fiasco last primary, notwithstanding the methods they resorted to in securing the nomination of their candidate, the rank and file in their party came near defeating them that they are afraid to run such risk again. They further say: "It was conceded that the people of Chilton county, should have an opportunity to nominate and elect their own officers, and that in this way every white man can make his voice heard and vote felt." Why did they not concede the truth, and say: that the bosses should have an opportunity to nominate and elect their own officers, and that in this way they do it. Now, in order to furnish a little proof of what they mean by "nothing to hold a mass meeting" to sustain the correctness of what we say, lend us your ears and we will whisper. A big boss offered to a gentleman who belongs to our party, but who has since become a candidate for the office of Sheriff in it, to guarantee him the nomination for this office at their mass meeting if he would allow his name to be placed before the meeting. Then, if we are wise, we will do as the gentleman referred to did. We will tell them that they can have the office, and that we want nothing for the empty honors they can confer. Every time that there is an election on hand some of those who are nearly dead for office begin to know that they can't get it without our help, seem to become very much concerned about our welfare and voluntarily advise us like this: "Let's all come together, stop this bickering and have peace and harmony in our county." When some of these very fellows have done more to foment political prejudice and strife than anybody else. Again they say: "We can do nothing outside of the Democratic party," etc.

Fellow citizens, are we not having as much peace and harmony in our county as anywhere? And is it true that we can do nothing outside of the Democratic party? Are not the people of our county and the people of the American Union enjoying a higher degree of prosperity and happines today than in any period of former times? And yet the Democratic party has control of neither, and God forbid that such times as we experienced during the time the Democratic party was in control of the national government will occur again.

During Cleveland's second administration was the only time in forty-six years when the Democratic party had absolute control of the executive and legislative departments of the government. We do not deem it necessary to mention here in detail what our people suffered during this time, for they well remember, and will not soon forget, that such distress and disaster was never before witnessed by a people in times of peace. And as to our county, we can congratulate ourselves on having the best public buildings of any county in the State for the amount of money expended in them, and that the financial condition of our county is unsurpassed by any other county in the State. This is briefly our condition, and the Democratic party has not had control of our county affairs since 1892, except during the time when Adams and Deason continued to hold the offices after turning their backs on the people who elected them.

Now, fellow citizens, that we in the last election stormed their stronghold ousted them from the offices which rightly belonged to us, and which were so wrongfully and unjustly withheld from us, appeal to you, who love liberty and justice, to stand by your colors, remain true to your cause, and when our valiant hosts are drawn up in battle array we will overwhelm the organized and intolerant Democracy in Chilton county in the coming election, and for all time. THE NEW BRYANISM.

By Jos. C. Manning.

In the ancient days, when the people were unmindful of the munificence of their environments, there were visitations said to have come upon them by plague and pestilence.

In these recent years, about the worst visitation to come upon the American people, to mar the long succession of their abundance and to chasten them for their inconsiderateness, was the last Democratic national administration. It now appears that even the tainted fragments of Clevelandism are being gathered together with the indescribable conglomeration of Bryanism, preparatory for another endeavored Democratic visitation which is threatened to appear in 1908. This political pest of variegated, earrasping, Democratic locusts of the New Bryanism seems to be swarming already, but the American people will hardly let this swarm, now high in the political hot air, settle down upon the green bay tree of Republican prosperity.

Were it to last for only one year the people of the United States might well endure a Democratic national administration. To bear the trail of ills for four long years, however, makes an impression on their minds—and stomachs—not soon forgotten. Should the people of America select an administration by "the ring-streaked and striped" Bryanism of now, they would no more know what they were getting than does any Democrat today know what the Democratic party stands for and really is.

The American people will, in the year of 1908, again say to the bedraggled Democracy of many colors, "Know thyself." It will also have "to learn to wait." The sea of impossibility between "the peerless" and the presidency is a vast bit deeper and broader than is the expanse of ocean now between Bryan and the political rooters and hungry officeseekers preparing for his home-coming. All that "the peerless" has urged that should be done, that which was worth the doing, will have been done before the talker sets foot on our American shores. Roosevelt, the doer, has disposed of Bryan, the talker. The American people know that the Republican party is a party of decision and of action. They know that it advocates precisely what it can be counted upon to execute, when in authority. They know, too, that, unlike the variegated Democracy, the Republican party does not kick itself to pieces when in control of the government. The American people also know that the Democracy, unable to save itself, from itself, is incapable of keeping the affirs of the nation in safety. The disasters of the Democracy will not scarcely again become the disaster of the welfare of the nation. To the Republican party will again be committed the government of the United States, and the prosperity of the present will continue the prosperity of the future.

Judge of Probate Chilton County, Ala.
6-21-06-2t.

Decatur, Ala.—Late Thursday afternoon as the steamer Joe Wheeler was coming down the river from Triana the waves from her wheel raised the body of George Rider, the young man who was drowned near Trinana on last Monday. The remains were found within a hundred yards of where the young man went down. The body was placed in a metallic coffin and sent to the home of his mother at Athens, Tenn.

Merchants Involved in Rebates.

Kansas City.—Proceedings may be brought against shoe and dry goods merchants of St. Louis, Omaha and Kansas City on a charge of accepting rebates from railways secured for them by George L. Thomas, the New York freight broker, who, with his chief clerk, L. B. Taggart, were in the federal court here fined and given sentence. These firms, numbering seven, were mentioned by Judge McPherson in sentencing Thomas and Taggart. He declared that the rebate taker was as guilty as the rebate giver and added:

"I assume that these concerns will be proceeded against for receiving these unlawful rebates, which can be done either by indictment or information."

While not admitting that such action would be begun against these merchants, A. S. VanValkenburgh, the district attorney who prosecuted the cases, intimated that the matter probably would be brought to the attention of the grand jury next fall.

Summary of Senate.

Washington, D. C.—The three hours of Saturday's session of the Senate previous to the closing of the doors for executive busines were divided between the discussion of the agricultural appropriation bill and a resolution by Senator Long calling on the attorney-general for information concerning the suits brought by him under the anti-trust laws.

The meat inspection debate occurred on a motion of Senator Proctor to send the agricultural bill to conference, and after speeches by Senators Bailey and Gallinger the motion was adopted.

The Long resolution was amended at the instance of Senators Foraker and Baker, but its consideration was not concluded.

The Sundry civil bill was sent to conference report on the bill, leaving only one item of disagreement to be acted upon.

A number of bills to which there was no objection were passed late in the day after the executive session.

Changes Made in Membership.

Washington, D. C.—The house Saturday adopted unanimously the election committee report that Ernest Wood was not elected to membership to the house from Missouri and that Henry M. Coudrey was elected to such membership.

There was no opposition on the republican side when, by request of Mr. Bartholdt, of Missouri, Mr. Coudrey presented himself at the bar of the house to take the oath.

The house also adopted a resolution that A. J. Houston was not elected a member of the Fifty-ninth congress from the Second congressional district of Texas. The sitting member, M. L. Brooks, therefore retains his seat.

The bill prescribing the duties of deputy collectors was passed without debate.

Death in Mud.

New York.—After more than twenty-four hours of pumping and digging the bodies of the two men trapped by a blow-out in one of the Pennsylvania Company's East river tunnels have been recovered.

Instead of being blown out into the river through the break at the base of the shield, as had been supposed, they were caught by the inrush of soft mud and water in the lower chamber of the shield, after the air pressure had found vent, and were found in postures indicating that they had strangled by inches.

Their feet were fast to heavy mud, and there were indications that they had made desperate efforts to release themselves. Both bodies were found in standing postures.

Pensacola Gets No Graving Dock.

Washington, D. C.—Senator Hale has presented a further report on the naval appropriation bill, leaving but one item of disagreement. Among the recessions on the part of the senate was included the provision for a graving dock at Pensacola, Fla. Senator Mallery expressed disappointment over this surrender, but did not resist the adoption of the report.

One Killed in Collision.

Birmingham, Ala.—One man was killed and five more or less severely injured in a head-on collision between a Southern freight train and a Louisville and Nashville freight train near Seymore, in Bibb county. The accident occurred about noon Saturday, and the trains colliding were westbound No. 148 of the Louisville and Nashville and eastbound No. 83 of the Southern.

Professor Moissan declared at the Paris Academy of Science that he had succeeded in boiling copper at a temperature of 2,100 degrees by means of a powerful electric current.

The Bridge-Tender's Daughter.

By RALPH D. PAINE.

WHEN Stella crossed the long bridge on her way home from school, she always stopped to make sure that her father's dinner was all that such a wonderful man deserved. As soon as the noon whistles blew, the bridge tender, in his little house perched high above the middle span, would begin to look eagerly across the causeway for the flutter of Stella's blue skirt and the gleam of the red ribbon on her hat.

She envied her small brother the honor of bringing the dinner pail from home. But it was a treat of which she never tired to climb to the airy engine house, kiss the big man in overalls, and flutter round him while he ate and chatted and pretended to drive her out with flourishes of a mighty fist.

After school, in pleasant weather, and when her home duties were not pressing, Stella would hurry across the breeze swept causeway to perch in the window of the engine house and look down the open harbor toward the sparkling stretches of Long Island Sound. There was always much to see, especially in the late afternoon, when the oyster sharpies were sailing home from the day's work. At first glimpse their sails were tiny specks against the blue water. If the wind was fresh and fair, they grew as if by magic, and in half an hour or so the laden sharpies came sweeping toward the bridge like great white birds eager for home.

Then her father pulled at a shining lever, the engine panted and groaned, and the great bridge opened its huge arms to welcome the hurrying fleet. And the oystermen, skimming through the draw, would look up from under their battered southwesters, and wave their hands at O'Connell, the bridge tender, with such hearty greetings as these:

"Hello, Bill! Here's two dozen fat ones on the half shell if you'll send that bright eyed kid of yours round for 'em after supper."

"A little breezy up there, Stella? Well, you ought to have down off Black Point to-day. It turned the oysters plumb inside out."

One afternoon late in the autumn her mother looked up from her knitting, and said to Stella with a worried air:

"Deary, I don't feel quite right about your father. It threatens to be the worst gale we've had in years. And he had one of his dizzy spells this morning, and I made him promise to get young Jackson to tend the draw this afternoon, while he went for some medicine and came home to lie down for a spell. It's nearly four o'clock, and he's not here yet."

Mrs. O'Connell was almost shouting, for the wind was crying wildly over the roof, and the cottage trembled with its fury. Stella stoked her mother's hair with a soothing gesture, and tried to reassure her.

"It's a big blow, mother, when we feel it here under the lee of the hill, almost a mile from the bridge. But daddy's found it too wet to go out, and he's waiting on the bridge, snug and warm, till six o'clock. Then he'll coming running like a big bear."

The mother shook her head, and went to the window with quick and uneasy step. She tried to pick up her work, but her mind was elsewhere. She turned to Stella again:

"No, I don't like to seem overanxious, but I'm not satisfied. I wish Bub here was bigger. I'd send him down to the bridge right away. I don't often worry, but your father's overdue. The storm didn't break till an hour ago. He had plenty of time to get young Jackson and be here long ago. And Jackson's home and idle, for I saw him this morning."

Stella listened to the war chant of the northeaster, and hesitated. Then her young mouth tightened in a firm line of decision as she said:

"I'm going to put on my long boots and reefer and go down there. The wet won't hurt me. I can't bear to see you fretting, mother. It isn't dark yet."

Her mother protested, but Stella darted into the hall, and presently reappeared, bundled up like a young midshipman on a winter's night. She kissed her mother and was off before more objection could be raised.

The girl did not know the might of the sudden storm until she staggered upon the open causeway across the marsh. Here the wind had swept up the unusually high tide, and was flinging it across the harbor wall in shattered billows. The biting air was full of flying scud, which filled her eyes so that she halted, afraid that a wave she could not see would dash her clean over the barrier.

Then she crept over to the lee of the seaward wall, and fell there, praying that strength might come back to her. Presently she pulled herself along, inch by inch, escaping the heaviest fury of the waves by crouching close against the wall.

Once on the long slope leading up to the drawbridge, the struggle was less terrifying, and Stella was able to rub the salt spume from her eyes and look up at the little house perched among the trusses of the middle span.

She hoped to see a light through the stormy twilight or a face at the window. But her stout heart sunk with vague forebodings when there was no greeting sign from the engine house. Then she had to fight for very life as she gained the end of the bridge whose iron railing gave no shelter.

The northeaster drove with a clean sweep across the roadway. It picked her up and threw her against the rail, and left her doubled up, groaning with pain and fright. Clinging, slipping, edging her way along, Stella reached the foot of the iron ladder and that led to the engine house. Her courage flickered and was almost gone. How could she muster strength to climb? She would be blown away even if her own weight did not drag her wearied hands from the slippery rungs.

She was never able to recall how she made the ascent, but somehow she found herself tugging at the engine room door. She stumbled inside and lay there, panting and sobbing.

When she was able to grope her way in the shadows round what seemed like an empty room, a great fear clutched at her heart. She remembered where the lamps were kept, and found matches beside them. The light showed her what looked like a bundle of old clothes doubled in a corner. She ran to it and found that it was her father, who turned a little and groaned. A pail of water was on the table, and she dashed it into his pale face, which was streaked with crimson. He raised his hand to his head, and she strove to help him, but his weight was too great for her to move.

Presently the engineer muttered brokenly:

"Stella, is that you? I went up on the roof—about four o'clock—to tighten the whistle valve. Blowing hard, my head went queer—I slipped and fell down to the platform. Must have crawled inside—all I remember."

His daughter put his overcoat under his head, and bathed the gash between the matted hair. She could only whisper through her tears:

"You're all right now, daddy. I'll take care of you."

O'Connell was silent for a moment, and then made a mighty struggle to raise himself, but sank back with a hoarse cry of fear:

"The sharpies haven't been through yet! Who'll turn the draw?"

She sprang to the window with strength revived, and looked down the harbor. The driving rain had lifted, and the angry sunset broke through the curtaining clouds. There was light enough for her to catch a glimpse of tossing bits of sail, hardly to be told from the ragged breakers on the skyline. She had not played on this bridge through five years to learn nothing of the ways of sharpies and their skippers. The fleet was driving home before the gale, carrying no more than rags of canvas, trusting that the bridge would swing in time to let them through. If it did not? She knew that these open boats would swamp if they were forced to come about in such a sea as this.

Stella shuddered and looked down at her helpless father. The agony in his eyes told her that he, too, realized the crisis. "Open the drafts!" he muttered. "Steam's got low."

She toiled at the furnace doors and dampers as she had seen him do so often. Turning toward him, breathless, for further instructions, Stella saw that his head had fallen back. He was again unconscious. Whatever was done, she must do alone. The pointer on the steam gage flickered and began to move upward, ever so slowly.

She went to the seaward window. The sharpies were rushing toward her as if they were winged. They leaped into sight and then were swallowed between the reeling combers. If they drove straight at the closed bridge and it failed to open, it meant wreck and collision and many lives lost, an awful welter of helpless men and broken boats.

Stella turned the steam pipe valve. She cried aloud with joy when the steam hissed into the pistons, and then she tugged at the starting lever. The great cog wheels of the turning gear began to move, like a sullen giant. In the closing dusk, the storm swept sharpies were lunging toward the bridge, hardly a quarter of a mile away. She closed her eyes for an instant in a panting little prayer, and the draw trembled as it obeyed the master call of the engine.

She feared to hear the crash of snapping masts and the cries of drowning men. Yes, the draw was swinging. She clamped the lever down, and snatched a moment to press her face against the pane. The fleeing oystermen were trying to luff off a little as they saw the draw move slower than usual. The deep laden sharpies yawed wildly, and Stella caught her breath in laboring gasps. Would they make it? Would the draw ever open?

Then the long arm of the bridge opened a black gap of water, the foremost sharpie scraped past by a hairbreadth, and the others tore after it like frightened, living things. Stella watched the gap close, and when the draw was again in line with the roadway, she shut off the steam and stopped the engine. A moment later there was a thundering knock on the door, and, sheepish and repentant, young Jackson came in with the storm.

"I told your dad I'd be down at two o'clock," he faltered. "And I got to playing cribbage and clean forgot it till just now. Is he killed?"

The culprit bent over the engineer and atoned for his sins by shouting the best of news:

"No bones broken, Stella, and his head is as sound as a nut, even if he has got an awful crack on the outside of it! This is all I can find, and I'm a natural born doctor. You stay here while I go down to the dock after a wagon. I'll be back in fifteen minutes, and we'll have home in a jiffy. Say, I'm scared to think what he'll say to me when he comes to. Here, don't slump down and cry that way. The worst is over. But that's just like a girl."—Youth's Companion.

THE PULPIT.

A SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY REV. DR. ALLAN DOUGLAS CARLILE.

Subject: Christian Growth.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The Rev. Allan Douglas Carlile, D. D., who has received a unanimous call to the pastorate of the Throop Avenue Presbyterian Church, in this borough, made vacant by the death of Dr. Louis Ray Foote in December last, preached for the first time to the congregation of that church Sunday morning. He is now the pastor of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church in Pittsburg, Pa., where he is highly esteemed. The subject of his discourse was "Christian Growth." His text was II. Peter iii:18: "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ," and he said:

In the Greek the article is before the noun in both cases: "Grow in the grace and the knowledge." Grace is defined, theologically and abstractly, as "God's loving favor; unmerited by us." The "grace" of our text is definite and specific: "the grace of our Lord Jesus," and, for our purpose this morning, may be taken as the sum total of the graces that make up Christ's matchless character, our development in Christ's likeness, and not by the acquisition of new graces, but by a growth of those within us already received. Growth, normal growth, is necessary to health; if life be checked it argues serious malady. Christian maturity is nothing short of Christ-likeness. This we have not yet attained; until we do there can be no more important question than: Are we growing at a normal rate? Are we better than our fathers? Is the Church to-day better than the Church of the Reformation? Or in the Apostolic day? Perhaps you doubt the possibility of such a thing. But mark how it grew from Pentecost to John, and then remember that we have the same things before us still undone. We have the same spirit of God to guide us, and we have had 1800 years more time. Would it not rather seriously reflect upon us if we had not advanced upon them? In the days of Ahab, the darkest period in history, Elijah wanted to die because he was no better than his fellows.

In the church, as in nature, there is a twofold growth: One from without and the other from within. From without the development of what I call corporation in numbers and in wealth and in the consequent influence upon the world which it has gained in the same way and maintained for the same reason as any other world power. The inward growth is development from the heart outward; growth of character, and, necessarily, a growth of individual character. The development of the church in character only through the development of the individual character. For the church is like other corporations; it has no character apart from its members, and it depends upon the perfection of each several member for its perfection. One, you see, is growth in bulk, the other in character—one of the corporation, of the corporation indeed, but only by the growth of the individual, and one is the rebuilding of the temple of God. One is the progress of the kingdom of God wherein we have a citizenship, and the other the progress of the kingdom of God, which is within you. The first we read of constantly, the second we hear of rarely. The last is the most important and the less continuous in this our day. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I glory in the outward growth of the church and the mighty works done for Christ in the world, but all our works mean nothing beyond the whitewashing of the outside of the sepulchre, save only in so far as they are the natural and inevitable evidence of the working of a God-like character. Are we growing in character at a normal rate? We know the standard. Christ gave it the parable of the tares and the wheat; tares and wheat growing side by side, but further and further apart. So are the church and the world growing together, but more and more unlike until the harvest. At sowing time, even, was not the dividing line clearly marked? Is it so to-day? If not it shows change of character on one side or the other. Which is it? You ask: Is not this spiritual development of so subtle a character that we can hope for its continuance even though not recognized in ourselves or others? How can there be change of character without a corresponding change of life? Look back to the sowing time, when to cross the dividing life meant martyrdom. We have a harder task to perform than any martyr had who died for Christ. There are hundreds here to-day who would do that. It is not hard to die for Christ, but I tell you it is hard to live for Christ; to plod on day by day on our unheroic way, persistently, consistently living with God in this world. And that is your task and mine. Get the character that will enable you to do that and you may let the works take care of themselves.

That question comes: "What is the use? Does not the catechism say we are not going to be perfect in this life, but will be when we die? What is the use?" Suppose the death angel summoned you to-day. In order to stand worthily in the presence of Jesus everything that defileth must be stripped off. What would there be left? A babe is perfect, but it is only a perfect baby. I once knew a beautiful child, the delight and joy of the household, but, alas! She grew up to the age of twenty and was still a babe. A babe of three is a child of promise, but a babe of twenty is a monstrosity. And is it not possible that in the holy city there are babes of three score years and ten whose only place is among the children? Would that satisfy you? No? Then "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." But how? Two things are necessary: The spirit of God in our hearts and the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The spirit of God you have; the knowledge of the truth you must acquire. For it is by the truth that you will be liberated; by the truth you are sanctified.

It is not enough, therefore, to say "I know I have not done as well as I know; I will try to do better." You always do as well as you know. The truth you know has been making you what you are. To be holy you must be wiser; to be better you must know more, for truth is not a thing you can record in a book or formulate in a creed. Truth is a great living character, a life-determining principle: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Take the Bible and follow the word. Like growth in Christ growth in knowledge must be gained individually. You cannot know another's knowledge any more than you can go to heaven on another's faith. Some years ago in a theological seminary a young man was being examined. He got along well until one of the examiners asked him a certain question, which took him by surprise. He could not answer in his then state of mind. If he had been asked suddenly his age he could not have told it. At last on the question being pressed he said: "I believe what the Presbyterian Church believes." He did not pass. It will not pass you. There are some things like that in the church, far too serious to be funny. Such as going to the pastor time after time and asking: "Is this right?" "Is that man's position correct?" Where is that spirit that guideth into all truth?

What are you doing to advance the Presbyterian Church, or our name in His name, by your own development? A danger to-day lies in believing in the wrong or error that may be in our creeds. Is there anything in them that ought to be eliminated? It is a great peril to think that all truth is in our creed and that what is not written there is wrong. For that stops advancement and is a check to our progress in Christ's knowledge and grace and means declension—loss. Christ taught the truth and did not formulate it. The apostles enlarged upon it to meet the needs of the growing church; the early fathers systematized truth into creeds. And so it went on down from the time of Constantine to the Renaissance, until we found the truth, not by ecclesiastical dictum, but in effect it was the same. I have seen old people so under the domination of their ecclesiastical commentator that they could see nothing in the Bible but what he taught.

But as I read the signs of the time the church to-day is on the eve of an advancement in the knowledge of Jesus Christ unequalled in her history. You and I want a part in that. I know some of my ministerial brethren do not so read: they listen to the jarring voices of to-day: "Down with the Bible. Lop off lump after lump and give us love in a mighty principle," which is but a sentimentality. That is not what God means. We are at the headwaters of a mighty, flowing river, which is yet bubbling and has not become deep and calm and still. But it will, and when it does we shall have more truth, not less. Be sure of that. Our creeds ought to gather up in themselves all the truth that is in Christ Jesus perpetually, just as He gathers up in Himself the "fulness of the godhead bodily." Their confusion is like a puzzle picture from which some pieces are lost. It is your duty, and mine, to find the pieces and put them in their proper places until our creed becomes a perfect pen picture of the God-man. When it does, we shall have a creed on which every lover of the God-man will stand comfortably. It will be that way in heaven. It shall be that way on earth. Don't you want a hand in that? How? Not only for your own sake, but for the world's sake and the church's sake. "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." How? Simply by the use of the means of grace which Christ instituted for that very purpose; by the public ministry of the Word, by private intercourse with Jesus, by your right use of the Word of God, by those activities for which you find channels not only in the church, but out of it every day, whereby your spiritual muscles and sinews are developed as your physical ones are—by use.

A Prayer.

Lord, I know not what I ought to ask of Thee; Thou only knowest what I need, Thou lovest me better than I know how to love myself. O Father, give to Thy child that which he himself knows not how to ask. I dare not ask either for crosses or consolations; I simply present myself before Thee. I open my heart to Thee. Behold my needs which I know not myself; see and do according to Thy tender mercy. Smite or heal, depress me or raise me up, I adore all Thy purposes without knowing them; I am silent; I offer myself in sacrifice; I yield myself to Thee; I would have no other desire than to accomplish Thy will. Teach me to pray. Pray Thyself in me. Amen.—Francois de la Mothe-Fenelon.

Secret of Her Power.

What was the secret of such a one's power? What had she done? Absolutely nothing, but radiant smiles, beaming good humor, the tact of divining what everyone felt and everyone wanted, told that she had got out of self and learned to think of others; so that at one time it showed itself by sweet words; at another, by smoothing an invalid's pillow; at another, by soothing a sobbing child. None but she saw those things. None but a loving heart could see them. That was the secret of her heavenly power.—Ram's Horn.

A Heart Throb.

O most glorious God, relieve my spirit with Thy graciousness. Take from me all tediousness of spirit, and give me a hope that shall not fail, a desire of holiness not to be satisfied till it possesses a charity that will always increase, that I may turn all things into religion, doing all to Thy glory; that, when Thou shalt call me from this deliciousness of employment, I may pass into the employments of saints and angels, whose work it is, with eternal joy and thanksgiving, to sing praises unto Thy mercies. Amen. —Jeremy Taylor.

The Victors Who O'ercame.

The word "tribulation" is derived from the Latin word tribulum, a threshing instrument, by which the Roman husbandmen separated the corn from the chaff, says a writer in the Southern Cross, and it was often used by the Christian writers as an image for setting forth a higher truth, and so the trials and sorrows of this life are "God's threshing instruments" for separating in men whatever is light, sinful, poor and trivial from what is good, solid and true—literally the wheat from the chaff—fitting them for the heavenly garner.

Man's Noblest Acquisition.

Goodness of heart is man's brightest honor and noblest acquisition. It is that ray of Divinity which dignifies humanity.

The Bridge-Tender's Daughter.

By RALPH D. PAINE.

WHEN Stella crossed the long bridge on her way home from school, she always stopped to make sure that her father's dinner was all that such a wonderful man deserved. As soon as the noon whistles blew, the bridge tender, in his little house perched high above the middle span, would begin to look eagerly across the causeway for the flutter of Stella's blue skirt and the gleam of the red ribbon on her hat.

She envied her small brother the honor of bringing the dinner pail from home. But it was a treat of which she never tired to climb to the airy engine house, kiss the big man in overalls, and flutter round him while he ate and chatted and pretended to drive her out with flourishes of a mighty fist.

After school, in pleasant weather, and when her home duties were not pressing, Stella would hurry across the breeze swept causeway to perch in the window of the engine house and look down the open harbor toward the sparkling stretches of Long Island Sound. There was always much to see, especially in the late afternoon, when the oyster sharpies were sailing home from the day's work. At first glimpse their sails were tiny specks against the blue water. If the wind was fresh and fair, they grew as if by magic, and in half an hour or so the laden sharpies came sweeping toward the bridge like great white birds eager for home.

Then her father pulled at a shining lever, the engine panted and groaned, and the great bridge opened its huge arms to welcome the hurrying fleet. And the oystermen, skimming through the draw, would look up from under their battered southwesters, and wave their hands at O'Connell, the bridge tender, with such hearty greetings as these:

"Hello, Bill! Here's two dozen fat ones on the half shell if you'll send that bright eyed kid of yours round for 'em after supper."

"A little breezy up there, Stella? Well, you ought to have down off Black Point to-day. It turned the oysters plumb inside out."

One afternoon late in the autumn her mother looked up from her knitting, and said to Stella with a worried air:

"Deary, I don't feel quite right about your father. It threatens to be the worst gale we've had in years. And he had one of his dizzy spells this morning, and I made him promise to get young Jackson to tend the draw this afternoon, while he went for some medicine and came home to lie down for a spell. It's nearly four o'clock, and he's not here yet."

Mrs. O'Connell was almost shouting, for the wind was crying wildly over the roof, and the cottage trembled with its fury. Stella stoked her mother's hair with a soothing gesture, and tried to reassure her.

"It's a big blow, mother, when we feel it here under the lee of the hill, almost a mile from the bridge. But daddy's found it too wet to go out, and he's waiting on the bridge, snug and warm, till six o'clock. Then he'll coming running like a big bear."

The mother shook her head, and went to the window with quick and uneasy step. She tried to pick up her work, but her mind was elsewhere. She turned to Stella again:

"No, I don't like to seem overanxious, but I'm not satisfied. I wish Bub here was bigger. I'd send him down to the bridge right away. I don't often worry, but your father's overdue. The storm didn't break till an hour ago. He had plenty of time to get young Jackson and be here long ago. And Jackson's home and idle, for I saw him this morning."

Stella listened to the war chant of the northeaster, and hesitated. Then her young mouth tightened in a firm line of decision as she said:

"I'm going to put on my long boots and reefer and go down there. The wet won't hurt me. I can't bear to see you fretting, mother. It isn't dark yet."

Her mother protested, but Stella darted into the hall, and presently reappeared, bundled up like a young midshipman on a winter's night. She kissed her mother and was off before more objection could be raised.

The girl did not know the might of the sudden storm until she staggered upon the open causeway across the marsh. Here the wind had swept up the unusually high tide, and was flinging it across the harbor wall in shattered billows. The biting air was full of flying scud, which filled her eyes so that she halted, afraid that a wave she could not see would dash her clean over the barrier.

Then she crept over to the lee of the seaward wall, and fell there, praying that strength might come back to her. Presently she pulled herself along, inch by inch, escaping the heaviest fury of the waves by crouching close against the wall.

Once on the long slope leading up to the drawbridge, the struggle was less terrifying, and Stella was able to rub the salt spume from her eyes and look up at the little house perched among the trusses of the middle span.

She hoped to see a light through the stormy twilight or a face at the window. But her stout heart sunk with vague forebodings when there was no greeting sign from the engine house. Then she had to fight for very life as she gained the end of the bridge whose iron railing gave no shelter.

The northeaster drove with a clean sweep across the roadway. It picked her up and threw her against the rail, and left her doubled up, groaning with pain and fright. Clinging, slipping, edging her way along, Stella reached the foot of the iron ladder and that led to the engine house. Her courage flickered and was almost gone. How could she muster strength to climb? She would be blown away even if her own weight did not drag her wearied hands from the slippery rungs.

She was never able to recall how she made the ascent, but somehow she found herself tugging at the engine room door. She stumbled inside and lay there, panting and sobbing.

When she was able to grope her way in the shadows round what seemed like an empty room, a great fear clutched at her heart. She remembered where the lamps were kept, and found matches beside them. The light showed her what looked like a bundle of old clothes doubled in a corner. She ran to it and found that it was her father, who turned a little and groaned. A pail of water was on the table, and she dashed it into his pale face, which was streaked with crimson. He raised his hand to his head, and she strove to help him, but his weight was too great for her to move.

Presently the engineer muttered brokenly:

"Stella, is that you? I went up on the roof—about four o'clock—to tighten the whistle valve. Blowing hard, my head went queer—I slipped and fell down to the platform. Must have crawled inside—all I remember."

His daughter put his overcoat under his head, and bathed the gash between the matted hair. She could only whisper through her tears:

"You're all right now, daddy. I'll take care of you."

O'Connell was silent for a moment, and then made a mighty struggle to raise himself, but sank back with a hoarse cry of fear:

"The sharpies haven't been through yet! Who'll turn the draw?"

She sprang to the window with strength revived, and looked down the harbor. The driving rain had lifted, and the angry sunset broke through the curtaining clouds. There was light enough for her to catch a glimpse of tossing bits of sail, hardly to be told from the ragged breakers on the skyline. She had not played on this bridge through five years to learn nothing of the ways of sharpies and their skippers. The fleet was driving home before the gale, carrying no more than rags of canvas, trusting that the bridge would swing in time to let them through. If it did not? She knew that these open boats would swamp if they were forced to come about in such a sea as this.

Stella shuddered and looked down at her helpless father. The agony in his eyes told her that he, too, realized the crisis. "Open the drafts!" he muttered. "Steam's got low."

She toiled at the furnace doors and dampers as she had seen him do so often. Turning toward him, breathless, for further instructions, Stella saw that his head had fallen back. He was again unconscious. Whatever was done, she must do alone. The pointer on the steam gage flickered and began to move upward, ever so slowly.

She went to the seaward window. The sharpies were rushing toward her as if they were winged. They leaped into sight and then were swallowed between the reeling combers. If they drove straight at the closed bridge and it failed to open, it meant wreck and collision and many lives lost, an awful welter of helpless men and broken boats.

Stella turned the steam pipe valve. She cried aloud with joy when the steam hissed into the pistons, and then she tugged at the starting lever. The great cog wheels of the turning gear began to move, like a sullen giant. In the closing dusk, the storm swept sharpies were lunging toward the bridge, hardly a quarter of a mile away. She closed her eyes for an instant in a panting little prayer, and the draw trembled as it obeyed the master call of the engine.

She feared to hear the crash of snapping masts and the cries of drowning men. Yes, the draw was swinging. She clamped the lever down, and snatched a moment to press her face against the pane. The fleeing oystermen were trying to luff off a little as they saw the draw move slower than usual. The deep laden sharpies yawed wildly, and Stella caught her breath in laboring gasps. Would they make it? Would the draw ever open?

Then the long arm of the bridge opened a black gap of water, the foremost sharpie scraped past by a hairbreadth, and the others tore after it like frightened, living things. Stella watched the gap close, and when the draw was again in line with the roadway, she shut off the steam and stopped the engine. A moment later there was a thundering knock on the door, and, sheepish and repentant, young Jackson came in with the storm.

"I told your dad I'd be down at two o'clock," he faltered. "And I got to playing cribbage and clean forgot it till just now. Is he killed?"

The culprit bent over the engineer and atoned for his sins by shouting the best of news:

"No bones broken, Stella, and his head is as sound as a nut, even if he has got an awful crack on the outside of it! This is all I can find, and I'm a natural born doctor. You stay here while I go down to the dock after a wagon. I'll be back in fifteen minutes, and we'll have home in a jiffy. Say, I'm scared to think what he'll say to me when he comes to. Here, don't slump down and cry that way. The worst is over. But that's just like a girl."—Youth's Companion.

THE PULPIT.

A SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY REV. DR. ALLAN DOUGLAS CARLILE.

Subject: Christian Growth.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The Rev. Allan Douglas Carlile, D. D., who has received a unanimous call to the pastorate of the Throop Avenue Presbyterian Church, in this borough, made vacant by the death of Dr. Louis Ray Foote in December last, preached for the first time to the congregation of that church Sunday morning. He is now the pastor of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church in Pittsburg, Pa., where he is highly esteemed. The subject of his discourse was "Christian Growth." His text was II. Peter iii:18: "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ," and he said:

In the Greek the article is before the noun in both cases: "Grow in the grace and the knowledge." Grace is defined, theologically and abstractly, as "God's loving favor; unmerited by us." The "grace" of our text is definite and specific: "the grace of our Lord Jesus," and, for our purpose this morning, may be taken as the sum total of the graces that make up Christ's matchless character, our development in Christ's likeness, and not by the acquisition of new graces, but by a growth of those within us already received. Growth, normal growth, is necessary to health; if life be checked it argues serious malady. Christian maturity is nothing short of Christ-likeness. This we have not yet attained; until we do there can be no more important question than: Are we growing at a normal rate? Are we better than our fathers? Is the Church to-day better than the Church of the Reformation? Or in the Apostolic day? Perhaps you doubt the possibility of such a thing. But mark how it grew from Pentecost to John, and then remember that we have the same things before us still undone. We have the same spirit of God to guide us, and we have had 1800 years more time. Would it not rather seriously reflect upon us if we had not advanced upon them? In the days of Ahab, the darkest period in history, Elijah wanted to die because he was no better than his fellows.

In the church, as in nature, there is a twofold growth: One from without and the other from within. From without the development of what I call corporation in numbers and in wealth and in the consequent influence upon the world which it has gained in the same way and maintained for the same reason as any other world power. The inward growth is development from the heart outward; growth of character, and, necessarily, a growth of individual character. The development of the church in character only through the development of the individual character. For the church is like other corporations; it has no character apart from its members, and it depends upon the perfection of each several member for its perfection. One, you see, is growth in bulk, the other in character—one of the corporation, of the corporation indeed, but only by the growth of the individual, and one is the rebuilding of the temple of God. One is the progress of the kingdom of God wherein we have a citizenship, and the other the progress of the kingdom of God, which is within you. The first we read of constantly, the second we hear of rarely. The last is the most important and the less continuous in this our day. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I glory in the outward growth of the church and the mighty works done for Christ in the world, but all our works mean nothing beyond the whitewashing of the outside of the sepulchre, save only in so far as they are the natural and inevitable evidence of the working of a God-like character. Are we growing in character at a normal rate? We know the standard. Christ gave it the parable of the tares and the wheat; tares and wheat growing side by side, but further and further apart. So are the church and the world growing together, but more and more unlike until the harvest. At sowing time, even, was not the dividing line clearly marked? Is it so to-day? If not it shows change of character on one side or the other. Which is it? You ask: Is not this spiritual development of so subtle a character that we can hope for its continuance even though not recognized in ourselves or others? How can there be change of character without a corresponding change of life? Look back to the sowing time, when to cross the dividing life meant martyrdom. We have a harder task to perform than any martyr had who died for Christ. There are hundreds here to-day who would do that. It is not hard to die for Christ, but I tell you it is hard to live for Christ; to plod on day by day on our unheroic way, persistently, consistently living with God in this world. And that is your task and mine. Get the character that will enable you to do that and you may let the works take care of themselves.

That question comes: "What is the use? Does not the catechism say we are not going to be perfect in this life, but will be when we die? What is the use?" Suppose the death angel summoned you to-day. In order to stand worthily in the presence of Jesus everything that defileth must be stripped off. What would there be left? A babe is perfect, but it is only a perfect baby. I once knew a beautiful child, the delight and joy of the household, but, alas! She grew up to the age of twenty and was still a babe. A babe of three is a child of promise, but a babe of twenty is a monstrosity. And is it not possible that in the holy city there are babes of three score years and ten whose only place is among the children? Would that satisfy you? No? Then "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." But how? Two things are necessary: The spirit of God in our hearts and the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The spirit of God you have; the knowledge of the truth you must acquire. For it is by the truth that you will be liberated; by the truth you are sanctified.

It is not enough, therefore, to say: "I know I have not done as well as I know; I will try to do better." You always do as well as you know. The truth you know has been making you what you are. To be holy you must be wiser; to be better you must know more, for truth is not a thing you can record in a book or formulate in a creed. Truth is a great living character, a life-determining principle: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Take the Bible and follow the word. Like growth in Christ growth in knowledge must be gained individually. You cannot know another's knowledge any more than you can go to heaven on another's faith. Some years ago in a theological seminary a young man was being examined. He got along well until one of the examiners asked him a certain question, which took him by surprise. He could not answer in his then state of mind. If he had been asked suddenly his age he could not have told it. At last on the question being pressed he said: "I believe what the Presbyterian Church believes." He did not pass. It will not pass you. There are some things like that in the church, far too serious to be funny. Such as going to the pastor time after time and asking: "Is this right?" "Is that man's position correct?" Where is that spirit that guideth into all truth?

What are you doing to advance the Presbyterian Church, or our name in His name, by your own development? A danger to-day lies in believing in the wrong or error that may be in our creeds. Is there anything in them that ought to be eliminated? It is a great peril to think that all truth is in our creed and that what is not written there is wrong. For that stops advancement and is a check to our progress in Christ's knowledge and grace and means declension—loss. Christ taught the truth and did not formulate it. The apostles enlarged upon it to meet the needs of the growing church; the early fathers systematized truth into creeds. And so it went on down from the time of Constantine to the Renaissance, until we found the truth, not by ecclesiastical dictum, but in effect it was the same. I have seen old people so under the domination of their ecclesiastical commentator that they could see nothing in the Bible but what he taught.

But as I read the signs of the time the church to-day is on the eve of an advancement in the knowledge of Jesus Christ unequalled in her history. You and I want a part in that. I know some of my ministerial brethren do not so read; they listen to the jarring voices of to-day: "Down with the Bible. Lop off lump after lump and give us love in a mighty principle," which is but a sentimentality. That is not what God means. We are at the headwaters of a mighty, flowing river, which is yet bubbling and has not become deep and calm and still. But it will, and when it does we shall have more truth, not less. Be sure of that. Our creeds ought to gather up in themselves all the truth that is in Christ Jesus perpetually, just as He gathers up in Himself the "fulness of the godhead bodily." Their confusion is like a puzzle picture from which some pieces are lost. It is your duty, and mine, to find the pieces and put them in their proper places until our creed becomes a perfect pen picture of the God-man. When it does, we shall have a creed on which every lover of the God-man will stand comfortably. It will be that way in heaven. It shall be that way on earth. Don't you want a hand in that? How? Not only for your own sake, but for the world's sake and the church's sake. "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." How? Simply by the use of the means of grace which Christ instituted for that very purpose; by the public ministry of the Word, by private intercourse with Jesus, by your right use of the Word of God, by those activities for which you find channels not only in the church, but out of it every day, whereby your spiritual muscles and sinews are developed as your physical ones are—by use.

A Prayer.

Lord, I know not what I ought to ask of Thee; Thou only knowest what I need, Thou lovest me better than I know how to love myself. O Father, give to Thy child that which he himself knows not how to ask. I dare not ask either for crosses or consolations; I simply present myself before Thee. I open my heart to Thee. Behold my needs which I know not myself; see and do according to Thy tender mercy. Smite or heal, depress me or raise me up, I adore all Thy purposes without knowing them; I am silent; I offer myself in sacrifice; I yield myself to Thee; I would have no other desire than to accomplish Thy will. Teach me to pray. Pray Thyself in me. Amen.—Francois de la Mothe-Fenelon.

Secret of Her Power.

What was the secret of such a one's power? What had she done? Absolutely nothing, but radiant smiles, beaming good humor, the tact of divining what everyone felt and everyone wanted, told that she had got out of self and learned to think of others; so that at one time it showed itself by sweet words; at another, by smoothing an invalid's pillow; at another, by soothing a sobbing child. None but she saw those things. None but a loving heart could see them. That was the secret of her heavenly power.—Ram's Horn.

A Heart Throb.

O most glorious God, relieve my spirit with Thy graciousness. Take from me all tediousness of spirit, and give me a hope that shall not fail, a desire of holiness not to be satisfied till it possesses a charity that will always increase, that I may turn all things into religion, doing all to Thy glory; that, when Thou shalt call me from this deliciousness of employment, I may pass into the employments of saints and angels, whose work it is, with eternal joy and thanksgiving, to sing praises unto Thy mercies. Amen.—Jeremy Taylor.

The Victors Who O'ercame.

The word "tribulation" is derived from the Latin word tribulum, a threshing instrument, by which the Roman husbandmen separated the corn from the chaff, says a writer in the Southern Cross, and it was often used by the Christian writers as an image for setting forth a higher truth, and so the trials and sorrows of this life are "God's threshing instruments" for separating in men whatever is light, sinful, poor and trivial from what is good, solid and true—literally the wheat from the chaff—fitting them for the heavenly garner.

A most curious combina... ...of fighting was that flag. The white stripes and stars were cut from soldier's shirts, the blue field was made from a cloak captured from the British down beyond the Hudson, and the red stripes were made from the petticoat of one of the women in the garrison.

When Willett came in from the sortie he hoisted the British flags on a staff above the fort with this new constellation waving over them. And there it fluttered till Burgoyne surrendered and St. Leger fled away with Indians cursing him.

One would like to dwell on the exploits of John Paul Jones, who hoisted the flag on the Ranger. "That flag and I are twins. Born the same hour from the same womb of destiny," as he used to say, because Congress ordered him to the Ranger at the time it established the flag. But of him it can be said only that on February 14, 1778, he sailed the Ranger with her flag flying through the French fleet in the harbor of Brest, and had the satisfaction of seeing the flag for the first time, receive a national salute from a foreign ship of war.

One may note that the flag was seen flying in the Thames on February 3, 1783, before the treaty of peace had been signed. It was on the good ship Bedford, of Nantucket, with a cargo of whale oil, and Captain William Mores was the venturesome Yankee skipper who went thus early to market. The arrival made a great stir in London, and especially in Parliament, but the war was over and the ship was safe.

As a part in the composition of a picture the flag was perhaps never so conspicuous as on Sunday, September 11, 1814, when it was seen over the American fleet at the battle of Lake Champlain.

The British had come from Canada with a great fleet under Captain George Downie, to sweep Lieutenant Macdonough's vessels from the lake, while Sir George Prevost, with an army of 11,000 veterans, chiefly "Wellington's Invincibles," had marched to the Saranac's bank at Plattburg, where McComb had but a few more than half as many men to meet him, even if untrained militia be counted. For two years the Americans had struggled well nigh in vain and the supreme moment of the war had come.

As 8 o'clock drew nigh that morning the great throngs of spectators saw the crew of the cutter bend to their oars and drive it away to the flagship. Then came the British fleet, rounding the point and sailing up close to the wind until opposite Macdonough's line of battle, where they anchored and the fight began.

As the broadsides roared among the hills the breeze died out, and soon the ships became enveloped in a cloud of smoke that rose and swelled till it covered the bay and buried the loftiest masthead from view. The spectators on the hills could see nothing of the battle, save only as the flash of the guns at times illuminated the smoke and sent a cumulous puff here and there from the great white cloud.

At last the firing died down, and the last gun was fired. At this a dead silence spread over the great throngs that had stood upon the hills. For the battle was over and no one there could tell how it had ended. For a few moments they gazed anxiously while the smoke of battle drifted slowly from around the ships, until a single tall mast appeared and then a patriot on Cumberland Head began to shout. A moment later the throng there saw the stars and stripes fluttering from that masthead above the smoke cloud, and with voices that were heard across the bay and over on the green hills of Vermont they told that Macdonough had won.

The flag waving alone above the cloud of smoke told the story of a nation saved from dismemberment.

Of many memorable occasions when the flag has thrilled the nation in time of peace not even mention can be made save only as we all remember that hurricane in Samoa, when our ships were driven to destruction, with the band on deck playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Ask the average boy what day is dearer to his heart than any other, Christmas not excepted, and invariably he will answer: "Fourth of July!"

What boy, then, would look with indifference on a Fourth of July luncheon table decorated in the following manner? Suspend a flag ball from the chandelier or ceiling. This ball is made of wire, or anything through which flags may be stuck. Use small one and two-cent flags, sticking them closely together. A ball of flags of any size is very effective.

Trim the edge of the white table cover with tiny flags crossed two by two. Have red, white and blue streamers coming from the ball to each boy's plate. On the end of each ribbon fasten a place card, each one painted with a different design.

In one corner of one card paint a little boy with a flag in his hat, beating a drum. In the other corner paint a bunch of firecrackers exploding.

On another card paint a cannon and a boy with a gun over his shoulder.

On another card paint an American flag or shield and little soldier boys marching to war with guns, flags and drums.

For the centrepiece use a large toy cannon decorated with flags. By the side of the cannon stack air guns or any sort of toy guns in stacks of three.

Another decoration can be eggs colored red, white and blue, piled on plates in cannon-ball fashion, and placed at each corner of the table.

For favors have tiny iron or pasteboard cannon at each plate, decorated with tiny flags.

Cut out pasteboard guns, paint them dark brown or black and stack three together. Pile near them large sized shot for cannon-balls.

Have red, white and blue paper napkins or flag napkins.

PRISON SENTENCES FOR RAILWAY REBATERS

Burlington and Four Beef Concerns Fined $15,000 Each.

JAIL FOR TWO NEW YORK MEN

George L. Thomas Fined $6000 and Four Months in Prison and L. P. Taggart Fined $4000 and Three Months.

Kansas City, Mo.—In the United State District Court Judge Smith McPherson, of Red Oak, Iowa, sentenced each of the four packing houses, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, recently convicted of making, accepting and conspiring to accept rebates on shipments, to pay a fine of $15,000.

Besides the railroad the companies thus convicted and fined are Swift & Co., Cudahy Packing Company, Armour Packing Company and Nelson Morris & Co.

George L. Thomas, of New York, was fined $6,000 and sentenced to four months in the penitentiary, and L. B. Taggart, of New York, was fined $4,000 and sentenced to three months in the penitentiary.

Thomas, who is a freight broker, and Taggart, his chief clerk, were convicted of securing rebates from railways on shipments from New York to St. Louis and Kansas City by dry goods concerns.

At their trial several prominent merchants who admitted having signed contracts with Thomas testified to receiving at various times sums of money from mysterious sources.

Many thousands of dollars were thus received, and some of the witnesses admitted the likelihood of it having come from Thomas.

The penalty provided is a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or imprisonment in the penitentiary for not more than two years, or both fine and imprisonment.

The four packing companies were tried jointly and convicted on the charge of accepting concessions from the Burlington Railroad, in connection with connecting lines, on packing house products, for export via New York.

The Burlington Railroad Company was convicted on four counts of granting concessions to the packing companies.

The penalty provided in the case of the packers and the Burlington involves a fine of from $1,000 to $20,000 on each count, but no imprisonments.

Appeals were filed in each case. The bonds in the case of Thomas and Taggart were fixed at $6,000 each.

These two men appeared in court personally and upon being sentenced promptly furnished the required bonds.

The bonds in the case of the packing companies and the Burlington were fixed at $15,000 each. Motions for new trials for the packers, the Burlington Railroad and Thomas and Taggart were all overruled.

MUTINY ON CONVICT FARM.

Louisiana Prisoners Turn on Guards —Four Men Killed.

Natchez, Miss.—Four men were killed and a fifth was fatally injured during an attempt by three life convicts to escape from the Angola (La.) State convict farm. Captain J. W. Block, foreman of the State convict sawmill, was shot dead, as were three convicts. J. W. Gibson, a guard, was shot through the body.

All of the convicts were sent up from New Orleans and were working in the sawmill. At 9 o'clock, a. m. while Captain Block was reading a paper, Singleton, a convict, obtained Block's revolver, and in company with Dutch and Bird were making off, when the attention of the guard, Gibson, was attracted.

Gibson fired on the party and Singleton returned the shot, shooting Gibson through the body, and as Gibson fell, Bird, another convict, took the revolver. Compelling Foreman Block to accompany them, the convicts started toward the river and had placed their captive in a skiff when they were fired on by a trusty named Deleth. Singleton then shot and killed Block.

Pay Guard J. T. Ogden joined Deleth, and in the fusillade of shots that ensued three men were killed.

Bay State House Finds Member Guilty of Attempted Bribery.

Boston, Mass.—At a session, marked at one time by unusual disorder, the Massachusetts House of Representatives voted to expel Representative Frank J. Gethro, of Boston. The House thus upholds the report of the Committee on Rules, which, after a long investigation of charges of bribery, made in connection with the defeat of the Anti-Bucket-shop bill, recommended Gethro's expulsion, on the ground that he had sought improperly to influence legislation. The vote was 142 in favor of expulsion and 54 against it.

KING HAAKON VII. CROWNED

Democracy Keynote of the Norwegian Coronation.

Striking Contrast to the Old Viking Ceremony When New Ruler Ascends Throne.

Trondhjem, Norway.—In striking contrast to the kings whom he succeeds, the Vikings of 600 years ago, King Haakon VII. and his queen, Maud, were crowned sovereigns of re-born Norway in this the ancient Norse capital. Visitors from far-away countries could not fail to think and to give expression to the thought, that the Vikings made themselves kings—King Haakon was made king by the grace of the people of Norway.

Everything was carried out with the utmost simplicity, in this respect resembling more closely the inauguration of an American President than a royal pageant.

Mingled with the expression of patriotism from the thousands of Norwegians in the old capital city, was the sentiment that their new crowned king was the ornament to the new political structure that the people had reared, while the visitors from abroad viewed the coronation more or less as a peculiar survival of medievalism and perhaps among the last such occasions of kingly pomp to survive the twentieth century, the era of democracy.

Beside the new-crowned king was his bride, crowned in her turn, Queen Maud, daughter of the King of England. Affection mingled with the patriotic sentiment that stirred thousands here for the coronation, but underlying the general feeling there was clearly shown a spirit, almost fierce, of nationalism, "All for Norway," as the national motto has it, that has never been equalled since the days of Norway's independence and power.

The coronation ceremony took place in Trondhjem Cathedral, not yet completed, but so covered with decoration for the occasion that its defects were not noticeable. King and queen sat in ancient chairs under canopies of red and gold, capped by crowns embroidered with the initials of Haakon and his wife, the whole placed between the two transets under the dome of the structure.

The royal procession from the palace to the cathedral was truly impressive. The populace, augmented many-fold by the visitors, seemed never to end their shouting. In the cathedral it was the same, although more dignified.

A battery of artillery boomed out its royal salute as the coronation was completed. The coronation music followed, consisting of a specially composed cantata in four parts, the work of Conductor Halvorsen, of the National Theatre of Christiana, and sung with a chorus of 220 voices.

RICH, HELD FOR MURDER.

Mrs. Kauffman Goes to Jail Charged With Killing a Servant.

Sioux Falls.—Mrs. Emma Kauffman, wife of Moses Kauffman, a millionaire brewer of this city, was held without bail for trial in the State Circuit Court on the charge of the murder of Miss Agnes Polreis, a sixteen-year-old girl, who was employed by her as a domestic. Mrs. Kauffman soon after the conclusion of her hearing was taken to the county jail. Her husband accompanied her to prison. She had a nervous collapse in the afternoon.

The proceedings in court occupied only a few minutes. When Mrs. Kauffman emerged from court her carriage, through a misunderstanding, was not at the curb. The crush became so great and the demeanor of the people so threatening that the party was compelled to seek refuge in a livery stable across the street, where they hired a rig. Shouts of "Lynch her" "Hang her!" followed the carriage until it had passed out of sight.

DIVORCE FROM TASKMASTER.

Chicago.—Mrs. William Palmer Armstrong, whose husband said her culture did not equal his, and gave her daily "stunts" to do in the way of memorizing the dictionary, has obtained a divorce. It was the task of the girl-wife each night, before retiring, to properly spell and thoroughly define the meaning of many words not ordinarily in present use. As a side line, and by way of recreation, she was expected to commit to memory such trifles as Milton's "Paradise Lost" and the majority of Shakespeare's plays.

According to the plaintiff the tasks were hard and the results were not all that her husband desired.

LAFOLLETTE TRIES TO SAVE COAL LANDS

Resolution Will Prevent Grab of 45,000,000 Acres.

PRESIDENT IN FULL ACCORD

Purpose is to Keep What is Left of Nation's Fuel Beds Out of the Control of Monopolies and Trusts.

Washington, D. C.—Standard Oil and railroad senators sat up and took notice when Senator La Follette introduced concurrent resolutions which, if adopted, will prevent the Federal Government from selling any more public lands underlaid with coal, ignite or oil, the purpose being to keep what is left of the lands out of the grasp of the coporations which have been grabbing all they could get as rapidly as possible.

It is Senator La Follette's idea that there are left 45,000,000 acres of public lands known to be underlaid with rich supplies of fuel. He thinks they will become a factor in the future industrial development of the country and should be retained by the Government. He has no radical notions about the Government operation of these fuel beds, but he is firm in the conviction that these necessities should be kept out of the greedy maw of the monopolies and trusts which are grabbing for them wherever they can be obtained by purchase or theft.

La Follette's belief is that with the Government in perpetual control of these fuel deposits it could prevent any threatened tieup of fuel such has been imminent in the past from coal strikes. President Roosevelt is in thorough accord with Senator La Follette on this subject.

Soon after Senator La Follette had spoken in the Senate on the flagrant wrongs being perpetrated against the five civilized Indian tribes by the seizure of their valuable coal and mining lands by the railroads, the President sent for the Senator from Wisconsin and talked over the entire question with him. The President then wrote in his message accompanying the Garfield report on Standard Oil:

"The time has come when no oil or coal lands held by the Government either within the public domain proper or in territory owned by the Indian tribes should be alienated. The fee to such lands should be kept in the United States Government whether or not the profits arising from it are to be given to any Indian tribe, and the lands should be leased only on such terms and for such periods as will enable the Government to keep entire control thereof."

The central point of the resolutions is contained in this section:

"That the President be authorized to withdraw from entry and sale all public lands known to be underlaid with coal, lignite or oil and all such lands as, in the judgment of the director of the geological survey, contain deposits of coal, lignite and oil, and that all such lands be withheld from entry and sale until such time as Congress shall determine otherwise."

Senator La Follette in presenting his resolutions spoke briefly, saying:

"I believe that there should be no doubt in regard to the President's power to withdraw these lands from entry and sale. There is little more to say in regard to the resolutions other than I believe every man in this country has a direct interest in knowing the character and extent of the coal deposits.

"There is not a pound of coal which should be wasted. The Government has about 45,000,000 acres of coal and lignite deposits. It should retain control of them. I do not contend that it should operate them. It might lease these lands to private companies upon its own terms to prevent the monopolization of the fuel supply, the manipulation of prices or the occurrence of such disastrous strikes as the great strike in the anthracite coal fields. The fact that the Government would own the coal supply and could dispose of it upon such terms as it would be pleased to impose, would enable the Government to enforce arbitration at least in all disputes between labor and the operators. I know that the President is anxious to conserve the fuel supply of the country, and the purpose of my resolution is to clear up all doubt as to his authority to withdraw these public lands for sale."

Another feature of the La Follette resolutions indicating the possible Government development of the fuel lands ready for operation, was this:

"That the Secretary of the Interior cause to be made a thorough investigation of the fuel, lignite and oil deposits of the United States and report to Congress the nature, extent and best methods of mining the same, so as to operate them with the least amount of waste."

Standard Oil might find a competitor in the oil field which it could not crush in the United States Government.

FOURTH DISTRICT.

What is the matter with the Fourth Congressional district? Are they dead or sleeping? We attended the meeting of the Ninth district committee Saturday last at Birmingham, and among the prominent Republicans of the State present we noticed Probate Judge L. H. Reynolds, of Clanton, and Mr. Lewis, of Calhoun county, who is slated for the State Senate from that county, being supported by the Republicans and the better class of Democrats. Former Probate Judge Davidson, of Blount county, made a speech, dealing with the taxation of this State, which ought to make him Governor.

THE HONORABLE WAY.

The following is taken from the Yellow Jacket of May 24, 1906. We reproduce it, not only because it is a strong arraignment of the Democratic party, but because it shows how an honorable man acts when he leaves a party which has placed him in an office: he resigns that office—he don't leave his party and hold on to the office.

QUITS THE PARTY.

Hon. Charles F. Toms, State Senator, Gives His Reasons for Leaving the Democratic Party.

The following is a letter addressed to the Governor of North Carolina, in which Hon. C. F. Toms tenders his regisnation as State Senator and bids farewell to the party to which he has always adhered. It ought to be interesting reading to any weak-kneed Democrats in the United States and should serve as an encouragement to other men who contemplate deserting the old hulk of Democracy and boarding the pride of the political ocean, the G. O. P. Here is the letter:

To His Excellency, Hon. R. B. Glenn
Governor, Raleigh, N. C.:

Sir—I have the honor herewith to tender you my resignation as Senator from the Thirty-third district of North Carolina. By so doing it becomes necessary for me to state to you briefly my reasons for this action upon my part, and in order that everybody may fully understand, I make this a public letter.

All my life I have been a Democrat fighting for the success of the Democratic party, and in this immediate section of the State I have taken quite a hand in political affairs. Up to this time I have never voted for a nominee of the Republican party in my life. I have been twice chairman of the Democratic executive committee in my county. I have been honored by the party both by appointment and election as solicitor in the criminal courts.

In the election of 1904 I was elected Senator to represent the counties of Henderson, Polk, Cleveland and Rutherford. Since I became a member of that body I have been treated with every courtesy by my Democratic colleagues. I am now a member of a number of important Senate committees, and am chairman of the committee on federal relations.

All this is a matter of pride to me, and under no circumstances would I mention it here were it not to show that I am not a "disgruntled Democrat. I have never asked the Democratic party for anything that I did not receive, and I fully appreciate the fact that my course in this matter may be criticized, but when I consider, however, that a man would be more than a moral coward who would think and believe one way, hold this office and then vote another way, I am impelled by the highest sense of my duty, as I see it, to make known my reasons in the premises.

Many of my best friends in the State are Democrats, and I only ask of them the same consideration for my feelings that they have already accorded to many prominent and some eminent members of the Democratic party who in the past belonged to other political organizations, and who thought it right, and desire to do as I now conceive it my right and privilege and the right and privilege of every other American citizen, to vote as their convictions prompt them to vote.

Reasons for Joining Republicans.

My reasons for joining the Republican party are many. First, after much study and mature thought I have arrived at the conclusion that the principles advocated by the Republican party are the best, if not the only principles, upon which the American people can safely rely. The Democratic party has been unable to adopt or give to the people one substantial plank upon which to stand.

It advocated free silver, and a great wing of the party advocates it yet, while practically the whole balance of the world has repudiated it as a false standard and we are now told that even Mexico, held up only recently to be the model free silver country of Christendom, has turned her back upon it, and the Democratic party as a whole is left with the shadow, while the Republican party holds the substance.

Every conceivable excuse has been advanced as to why the gold standard succeeded in the combat, but no reason or excuse has ever been advanced which satisfies me that free silver was defeated by anything other than the fact that the great mass of American people who voted for McKinley discerned further into the future than many of those who voted for Mr. Bryan.

The same is true of free trade. We love to tell about the great number of incorporated enterprises and manufactories which are fast making North Carolina famous. We are glad to know that these thriving manufactories and business enterprises of which we so proudly boast are protected and fostered by State laws to the extent that they are, but I am satisfied that were it not for the protective laws enacted by Congress many, if not all, of the great manufacturing plants would cease to exist—foreign pauper labor would come in competition with ours and American laborers who earn their daily bread in the work shops and factories of the United States—the most prosperous country on the face of the globe today, would cease to receive the high wages they are now getting and would be placed on an equal footing with the cheap labor of Europe.

This state of affairs I never want to see.

We own the Philippine Islands and I am in favor of keeping them. I will mention only one great and true reason among many sound ones that have bee advanced why we should keep them. It is a matter or fact that the destines of the cotton grower and cotton manufacturer of the Southern States go hand in hand. The Philippine Islands will form a great market in the East for their manufactured fabrics, as also will their acquisition be beneficial to us in extending our trade relations in the Orient and along other lines as well.

I admire President Theodore Roosevelt. I regard him as one of the greatest, most fearless, purest and best men the United States has ever produced. He is a man who has had the nerve to fearlessly do his duty as he saw it upon all occasions, and while he has doubtless made mistakes in some instances, he is in my opinion more deserving of praise than those who have maligned him are deserving of condemnation. He will go down in history as a great man and a great President.

The Democratic party has too many bosses and too little unison.

There are too many kinds of Democrats. There are free trade Democrats, free silver Democrats, Bryan Democrats, Cleveland Democrats, Jefferson Democrats, Roosevelt Democrats, prohibition Democrats, anti-protocrats, free silver Democrats, gold standard Democrats, high tariff Democrats, Bryan Democrats Cleveland Democrats, Jefferson Democrats, anti-imperialism Democrats, and I was only recently talking with an old man in my county who gravely informed me that he was an "Abe Lincoln Democrat."

No Such Confusion Since Babel.

In fact, to tell the truth, there has never been so much confusion since the building of the tower of Babel as exists today in the Democratic party, and how the people of North Carolina can ever expect any relief from or reforms at the hands of that party, owing to the present state of affairs, is incomprehensible to me.

The negro vote, which a few years ago was credited to the Republican party in North Carolina, has been eliminated and that party stands today in this State as a white man's party and is indeed as white as any party, and no man can say it is otherwise and tell the truth.

Another thing I have noticed particularly and that is the Republican party as a whole is progressive in all things and looks after the interest of all classes of our people. It assists those who need assistance, and gives relief to those who are in distress. It enacts laws which both benefit the laborer and the capitalist.

On the contrary, as I have heretofore stated, the Democratic party, in my opinion, advocates only such measures as have, when tried, proven detrimental to the best interests of the people. In fact, the principles and policies of the Democratic party that have heretofore been enacted into laws have proven to be utter failures, and no substitute for dead issues which that party continues to parade before the people have been offered, and I have no idea that any will be offered.

No Ill Will to Democrats.

In conclusion, let me say that in leaving the Democratic party I have no harsh words for or ill will toward any one. Many members of that party in this State are unsurpassed either in character or ability, and it is with these that I regret to sever my past political affiliations, and I send you my resignation as State Senator simply because to do otherwise, believing as I believe, and feeling as I feel, would be a violation of the duty I owe to my constituents as well as the duty I owe both to the party I am leaving and the party I have joined.

With the kindest regards to you personally, I beg to remain,

Yours respectfully,
CHARLES FRENCH TOMS.

CENTER POINT.

Health not very good, some sickness being around. Some grass yet, but not much. We don't grumble about rain but trust in an Allwise Providence Well, we went to Beth Salem to Children's Day Sunday, and they certainly did have a nice good time and some as good singing as we ever heard. It made me think of the good old times when I used to sing with Mars Hill, Rocky Mount and Providence classes. E. G. Cofer and family recently visited their son-in-law, C. W. Langston, near Billingsley; and they had a singing and a musical entertainment up at Bro. Geo. Askins. Everybody was pleased, and it kind of waked them all up on the line of singing, and we're going to have a singing school at this place right away. We certainly had a good singing at Shiloh school house Sunday evening, and there will be singing there the second Sunday evening in July. Well, Sam Gentry, the deaf mute, had a very thrilling experience the other evening, while down on the branch fishing there came along a very large otter, and Sam just jumped into the branch and onto the otter with both feet and held it down until he got it by the legs and killed it against a log. He was lucky not to get bitten by it, but he has the hide and will take it back with him when he goes to Talladega school to show his classmates what grows in Chilton.

MAPLESVILLE.

Hot and dry after the showers, thermometer ranging in the 90's. Crops are doing better than gardens. Many are taking advantage of the bright weather for visiting. Miss Mitchell, of Stanton, is with her friends, the Misses Ramsey. Rev. Davis preached his usual most excellent sermon Sunday morning to a very appreciative audience. Rev. P. G. Maness gave his characteristic good sermon to a crowded house Sunday afternoon. Miss Sallye Walker and her young brother Britt, have visited friends in Stanton. Mrs. D. Williams is having an enjoyable visit to relatives on Mulberry. Jesse Hayes has added much to our town in bringing in a beautiful and intelligent bride. Mr. Tomlinson and Miss Fannie Hinson were married at the bride's home in the presence of many well-wishing friends. The ceremony was most impressively performed by Justice B. O. Glover. Grover Williams has accepted a good position in Selma and is much pleased there. Mrs. Harris, who has made many friends during her stay with us, is now visiting her old home in Dunkirk, N. Y. Many are wishing for her early return. Mr. Dedrick has performed a most patriotic duty in so successfully managing his "auto" that we no longer have vilsons of its occupants being strewn along its wake in a dead or dying condition. Our staid old neighbor, Buck Bowline, who was in such dread of this locomotive, is now smilingly enjoying his rides with Mr. Dedrick. A most delightful serenade was given Mr. Hayes and several other friends the evening he brought his bride to his beautifully furnished home. A new tin roof adds greatly to the appearance of the Southern railroad depot. C. W. Plant, his daughter, Mrs. G. Hanlin, and little Miss Louise are enjoying a visit to Washington City. Success to The Union.

SARDIS CLIPPINGS.

Editor Union:

We are all farmers over this way and have very good crops, though cotton is a little backward. J. D. and Tonie Deason are on the sick list. We hope for their speedy recovery. Oliver Latham is putting up a new sawmill in our midst. Lee Hayes was in our neighborhood a few days ago and met up with many friends, political and otherwise. Mr. Hayes has a host of friends in beats 7 and 8. We know that if he is elected he'll make us a good sheriff, and is always ready to perform the same, day or night, cold or hot. I think the county can't do better than to elect him to the sheriff's office. The people in this part of the county stand pat for Mr. Hayes for sheriff. "VET."

HEAD OF MULBERRY.

Editor Union:

Health of this community is good, except a few cases of whooping cough. Rev. Thomas filled his regular appointment at Pleasant Grove Sunday. Rev. R. M. Honeycutt will preach at the Mullins school house the first Sunday in July. All come out and hear him. Politics is getting warm. I've heard some say that Mr. Fitts will be nominated and elected. He would surely make a good one, one who would stand to his post and do his full duty, and hold his office till his time was out. We don't want another Democratic sheriff appointed in this county. If the county is as strong for T. J. Fitts as this community he will go in by a large majority. Hurrah for Fitts, boys, and whoop him up again. MAMA'S PET.

THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

The Republican Executive Committee of the Ninth Alabama Congressional district was called together at noon today in Magnolia hall by Chairman J. W. Davidson.

Mr. Davidson urged a strong stand by the Republicans for every office in the State, from Governor down.

Present at the meeting were the following:

J. W. Davidson, chairman.

Prof. J. T. Blakemore, secretary.

Blount County—Dr. J. L. Armstrong (proxy), J. B. Sloan, G. W. Phillips, J. H. Hayes.

Bibb County—N. C. Fuller, K. C. Mahan, N. L. Wilson, J. C. Hicks (proxy), T. B. Lawler, A. J. Prince, (proxy) J. R. Lenter).

Jefferson County—J. W. Hughes, J. H. Montgomery, J. C. Cook, J. H. Bingham (proxy), John Towers, William Vaughn, G. R. Lewis.

Following the roll call a fight was at once begun upon the matter of proxies. Mr. G. R. Lewis, the member from Bessemer, read a resolution proposing a committee on proxies. Chairman Davidson at once arose and stated that he would rule this out of order, because it took the power of appointment from the chairman.

Mr. Lewis appealed from the decision of the chair, but his appeal was lost. Judge J. H. Montgomery and Mr. John C. Towers took part in the discussion.

Committeeman Lewis made a motion that in the absence of other rules a majority vote should govern. This was tabled. The question of seating proxies brought out another protest from Judge Montgomery.

Answering a remark of Mr. Lewis, Mr. William Vaughn made a talk in which he stated that the Republican party in Alabama could never build up a party without recognizing proxies. Cheers and applause followed. Over one of the proxies, that of J. Carter Cook, removed from Alabama (the proxy having been delegated by telegram to Mr. Vaughn), there was no little opposition, it being charged that Mr. Cook's removal from Alabama deprived him of membership on the committee. At this point a short recess was taken to allow Chairman Davidson time to consult the national committee rules.

Judge Montgomery then moved the acceptance of all proxies except that of Mr. Cook. Mr. Vaughn moved, as a substitute, the seating of all proxies. Mr. Vaughn then announced that he had transferred the proxy to F. M. Johnson.

Judge Davidson, of Blount county, proxy for Dr. Armstrong, here made a speech, in which he asserted that all the investigation in regard to Mr. Cook's citizenship in Alabama, etc. was "bosh and foolishness."

The previous question upon Judge Montgomery's motion was asked by Mr. Vaughn, and all proxies were seated except that of Mr. Cook. Upon seating the latter, the roll call was asked, and Mr. Johnson was seated by a vote of 9 to 6.

Mr. Vaughn then offered a resolution endorsing the Republican national administration and the principles ad policies adopted by the national convention of 1904. Adopted.

The chairman then stated that the next matter of discussion was whether or not a district convention should be called. Mr. Vaughn made a motion that the power to call this meeting be vested in the chairman. Mr. Lewis offered as a substitute that the power be given the committee.

A. J. Prince, of Pratt City, stated that the committee should see whether or not it should put out a ticket.

Dr. J. W. Hughes evoked merriment by his remark that the calling of the district convention should have nothing to do with the date of the Democratic primary.

The following resolution, with a motion for its passage, was presented by Judge Davidson, of Blount county:

"Resolved, That we condemn in unmeasured terms the vacillating action of Chairman J. O. Thompson in rescinding his recent call for a meeting of the Republican State Executive Committee."

Judge Davidson took the floor and made a heated argument favoring his motion.

"I want it adopted to show the people of this State that we propose to present State as well as national issues to them."

Judge J. H. Montgomery stated that the adoption of a resolution stating that its own chairman was a vacillating man would be a direct blow to the party in Alabama.

"Don't let us start out with condemnation the very first thing." He proposed a resolution that the "State chairman be respectfully requested to call a meeting of the State committee at the earliest possible date, without waiting for the action of the Democratic primary."

Messrs. J. R. Carter and J. Clyde Miller also took part in the discussion. The following resolution was then adopted:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this district committee that the State chairman is urged to call the State committee, and the said committee is hereby requested and urged to meet and call a State convention without waiting for the Democratic primary."

The committee declined to pass the resolutions condemning the action of Chairman Thompson, and the matter was never put to a vote.

Resolutions endorsing President Roosevelt, presented by Committeeman N. L. Wilson, withdrawn by him and then proposed by Judge Montgomery, brought on another battle on the committee floor. Mr. Vaughn charged that the resolutions were not needed in Washington. "There's going to be a man who is going to raise some issues, false issues, mayhap, to try to defeat the Republican party two years from now. It's going to need all the stump-speaking and brains the party's got to defeat Billie Bryan."

The resolutions which incited Mr Vaughn's speech were never put to a vote of the house.

The committee then adjourned.

In the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama.

G. C. Michelson, plaintiff, vs. A. L. Wambem, Defendant.

To A. L. Wambem, the defendant in the above stated cause, who resides at Saint Ansgar Postoffice, in the county of Mitchell and State of Iowa, U. S. A.:

You will take notice that G. C. Michelson, plaintiff in said cause, sued out an attachment against you, said A. L. Wambem, on the 19th day of June, 1906, in said court, to enforce the collection of a debt due him by you in the sum of $279.17, with interest theheon at 8 per cent per annum, as follows, to-wit:

1. By one promissory note made by you to Birmingham Grain Co. on the 30th day of June, 1903, and payable on the first day of October, 1903, in the sum of $49.00, with interest thereon from its date, together with the sum of $15.00 as a reasonable attorney's fee for collecting said note as provided for in said note, said note being credited with $10.00 on the 14th day of March, 1904. 2. By one promissory note made by you to J. C. Deshazo on the 31st day of December, 1903, and payable on the first day of August, 1904, in the sum of $35.00, with interest thereon, together with the sum of $10.00 as a reasonable attorney's fee for collecting said note as provided for in said note, said note being credited with payments as follows: $16.44 on the 17th day of August, 1904, and $4.50 on the 2d day of January, 1905. 3. By account due J. C. Deshazo by you on the 31st day of December, 1903, in the sum of $68.00 with interest thereon. 4. By account due J. O. Kelly & Sons, a partnership, by you on the 9th day of March, 1899, in the sum of $35.81, with interest thereon. 5. By account due P. W. Parnell by you on the 25th day of August, 1904, in the sum of $28.01, with interest thereon, said account being credited with a payment of $25.00 on the first day of December, 1905. And it is shown by the affidavit of said Michelson that each of said notes and accounts were duly sold, transferred and assigned to said Michelson before the 19th day of June, 1906.

You will further take notice that said attachment was sued out without bond being given by the plaintiff and was levied upon the following real estate, to-wit: The south half of the southwest fourth of the northeast fourth, and the northwest fourth of the southwest fourth of the northeast fourth, all in section 1, township 22 of range 13, situated in Chilton county, Alabama, as the property of said A. L. Wambem, the defendant, properly addressed and postage prepaid.

Witness my hand this the 26th day of June, 1906.

SAM W. COLLINS,
Clerk.

SOUTH BESSIE.

There are so many bright, newsy letters in The Union from week to week until we sometimes think it would be best for us to take a back seat and say nothing. But we venture to the front again. Such hot weather; still the nights are cheered by the lone voice of the whippoorwill, and the scenes of the day are enlivened by the beautiful myrtle, with its long spikes of lovely flowers. Some poet, in speaking of the earth yet to be, has said, "Where the clime is like one long summer day, where the lidy and rose with the myrtle entwine and the land is as flowery as May." Well, that "Republican" of Clanton is a good one. We are pleased to note the candidates, all of them, thus far are willing to pledge themselves to help elect the nominee. That is right and manly. This way some few have had of "souring" when defeated is all wrong. That class is never apt to get anything, and they are not worthy of anything, but those who remain true will be remembered by the people at the proper time. We would like to vote for all you candidates for Sheriff, but you know they will not let us do that. So we hope the best man will win. There is no predicting yet what the people will do, for they are going to run this thing. They may just bring to the front such men as W. R. Jackson, J. H. Thomas, J. Osmond Midleton and others and have the office seek the man. Well, we are having singings, children's days and conventions galore. The latter shows thinking people that a great church confederacy is rapidly coming; indeed is an established fact, as pointed out by the eminent C. T. Russell, from holy writ years ago. Say, all you correspondents give us the news. The Union grows better and better.

WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, theFather of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

The Old State House

Built in 1713. The rampant lion and unicorn of England still adorn the gable overhead.

BUNKER HILL.

With thoughts of Independence Day are indissolubly linked Bunker Hill. It is said the original Bunker Hill is just outside Belfast, Ireland. The cornerstone of the Bunker Hill monument was laid June 17, 1825. Daniel Webster made the address, and Lafayette was present. When the shaft was dedicated there was also an oration by Webster and President Tyler and his Cabinet were present. In 1842, upon its completion, an address written by the Hon. Robert Charles Winthrop was read by ex-Governor John D. Long.

THE DECLARATION COMMITTEE.

Although the American colonies had been at war with England over a year it was not till July 4, 1776, that a majority of the Continental Congress, representing the colonies, voted for final separation from the mother country, July 4, on the motion of Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, the Congress voted that "the United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States." A committee consisting of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert R. Livingston was appointed to draw up a declaration of independence, which was afterward signed by fifty-six delegates representing thirteen States.

THE FIRST PATRIOTIC SONG.

By Helen Brown.

The Puritans of England held music in no very high esteem. They held in abhorrence "piping with organs, singing, ringing and trowling of psalms from one side of the choir to the other," as complained of in their protest to Parliament. In fact, their fanaticism bred so much hatred for such things that they came to look upon music as positively unchristian. So the Pilgrims brought to America with them the style of music that prevailed when they left the mother country, which goes without saying that it was not of the most inspiring, cheering kind.

The generation preceding the Revolution is referred to as the "Psalm-singing generation." The Colonies were absorbed with the task of revising and republishing the Psalms.

In 1713 an organ was introduced into Boston, but the prejudice was so great that the instrument remained unpacked in the porch of the church for seven months.

Up to this time there had been no native compositions, but a little later on the first compositions were the work of one William Billings, a tanner by trade. As Psalm singing still prevailed his first production was the "New England Psalm Singer," which was followed by "Singing Master's Assistant" and "Music in Miniature." His later works were of a patriotic order and it is due to this fact that they became so popular. His "Lamentations Over Boston" breathed the spirit of the Revolution, as also did his "Retrospect," "Independence and "Columbia."

THE FIRST FLAGS.

In July, 1775, on Prospect Hill, General Israel Putnam raised a flag upon which was incribed the motto of Connecticut, "Qui transtulit sustinet," and on the reverse were written the words "An Appeal to Heaven." In October, 1775, the floating batteries of Boston carried a flag with the motto "An Appeal to Heaven," the design being a pine tree on a white field. Virginia carried a flag in 1775 which displayed a rattlesnake coiled as if about to strike, and the motto, "Don't tread on me." When General Washington assumed command of the motley army gathered before Boston in January, 1776, the flag raised at his headquarters had the thirteen red and white stripes just as they are to this day, but the union was formed of the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew displayed on a blue ground. It is said that when the British regulars saw it they supposed it was an evidence of submission to the King, who had just issued his proclamation.

FLAG LORE.

Some writers assert that the first and original United States flag contained only twelve stars, because Georgia was not entitled to a vote. Such a flag is said to have been made by the ladies of Philadelphia from the design of the escutcheon of the Washington family. It is alleged that this flag was presented to John Paul Jones, that he carried it with him on his ship, the Bon Homme Richard; that in his great fight the flag was shot away and fell into the sea, and that Lieutenant Stafford leaped overboard after it, brought it safely to the ship and nailed it to the masthead. This story may have some basis in fact, but the act of Congress of June 14, 1777, shows that no standard was recognized by the Government until that date.

STIRRING SCENES.

At 2 o'clock on the afternoon of July 4, 1776, stirring scenes were enacted in Philadelphia. In answer to the signal of "Ring!" given by the lad stationed below for that purpose, the old bellman rang out a wonderful peal, while the whole city shouted for joy. The King's arms were taken down from the Court House, the city was illuminated, bonfires were lighted and rejoicing continued far into the night. In New York a leaden figure of George III. was pulled from its pedestal on Bowling Green and moulded into bullets.

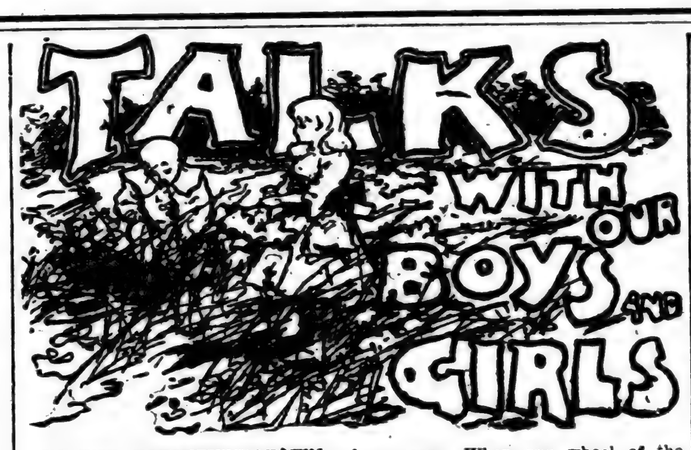
dicament alive, I'll neveh again awsk a livewyman foh an English-bwed horse on the Fou'th of July!"—Puck.

SOLDIERS OF THE REVOLUTION.

During the Revolutionary War, Great Britain sent 112,584 troops for land service and over 22,000 seamen to America, while the colonists had 230,000 continental soldiers and 56,000 militia under arms.

Chicago deaconesses made 19,000 missionary and parish calls in their work last year.

LIBERTY BELLS.



IN THE TOPSYTURVY-TOWN.

I've been to Topsyturvy-Town,
Where all the world was upside down,
The houses underneath my feet!
And trees whose trunks went down to meet
Their leafy branches, far below—
The little birds hopped to and fro
All upside down!

I saw quite plainly, standing there,
A little girl with curly hair,
Who was myself, but upside down
In funny Topsyturvy-Town!
Beyond her big round hat, the sky,
All full of clouds, went moving by,
And I looked down, not up, you know,
To see the clouds a-sailing go
In Topsyturvy-Town.

The rain has spread great puddles round
Like mirrors laid upon the ground,
And all the things of earth or sky,
If you look down, will meet your eye.
It was such fun, along the way
From school, in every pool to play
At Topsyturvy-Town.

"I WILL NOT SAY."

The story of a little Boer boy who refused to betray his friends even on the threat of death is told by Major Seely, M. P., as an illustration of deeply rooted love of freedom and of country. It happened during the Boer war.

"I was asked," said Major Seely, "to get some volunteers and try to capture a commandant at a place some twenty miles away. I got the men readily, and we set out. It was a rather desperate enterprise, but we got there all right. I can see the little place yet, the valley and the farmhouse, and I can hear the clatter of the horses hoofs. The Boer general had got away, but where had he gone? It was even a question of the general catching us, and we not catching the general. We rode down to the farmhouse and there we saw a good-looking Boer boy, and some yeomen. I asked the boy if the commandant had been there, and he said in Dutch, taken by surprise, 'Yes,' 'Where has he gone?' I said, and the boy became suspicious. He answered, 'I will not say.'

"I decided to do a thing for which I hope I may be forgiven, because my men's lives were in danger. I threatened the boy with death if he would not disclose the whereabouts of the general. He still refused, and I put him against a wall, and said I would have him shot.

" 'Now,' I said, 'before I give the word, which way has the general gone?'

"I remember the look in the boy's face—a look such as I have never seen but once. He was transfigured before me. Something greater almost than anything human shone from his eyes. He threw back his head, and said in Dutch, 'I will not say.' There was nothing for it but to shake hands with the boy and go away."—Singapore Strait Budget.

THE MYSTERY HUNT.

Have you ever joined in a Mystery Hunt? It is an excellent game to break any stiffness or shyness in a social gathering, writes Mildred Norman in Zion's Herald. Arrange as many trails as there are guests. Use ordinary twine, or try balls of different colors. The trails are arranged in a haphazard way, the cord being carried in various directions and twisted about various objects to hold it—now a chair, now a table, a door knob, out into the hall, around the stair railing, under a door, up to a window, back of a couch, etc. Each line must lead to quite a different termination. The intersection of the trails bring the guests into a merry contact, and they are obliged to dive under and over each other's trails.

At the end of each trail a package is to be attached. It may be of any size or shape. It may contain anything, from a pin to a pin cushion, a wafer, cooky, apple, nut, bonbon, or a box of bonbons and a bag of nuts, or any nonsensical thing or pretty ornament, or bit of fancy work. The package may be made up in shapes and sizes entirely unlike the contents. Each one, on finding the package at the end of his line, is to take it to the meeting place agreed upon, or the starting place, and when all are gathered the packages are to be opened one at a time.

The game may be made very interesting and lengthened by having a topic for conversation fastened at the end of each line, or the guests can be instructed at the start that they are to converse about the article they find, or the topic may be enclosed with the article.

KEEPING AT IT.

"I have seen boys," said the master, "who would start to make a sled, and by the time the first runner was finished decide they would rather have a wagon. When one wheel of the wagon was sawed out, they would conclude to make rabbit traps. After hunting for two hours for just the right kind of a hollow tree, they would take a notion to go skating. You know what kind of men such boys make?"

We smiled and said we thought we did.

"You ought to," said the master; "you have seen plenty of them. When a boy of that kind grows up he will rent a farm, and by the time the crop is half made, trade it for a span of mules, sell the mules, and put up a little grocery store. The grocery store fails, and he decides to be a carpenter. He gets a second-hand set of tools, and when he gets a job, quits it so often he is discharged. Then he borrows money of his wife's father to start a dray, and the first time he gets a good job of hauling, goes off duck-hunting.

"Those kind of fellows will putter three days over a seventy-five cent clock, and put in a month of good plowing weather trying to make a windmill.

"It was not a bad plan the Indians had of teaching their boys to swim. They just threw them in, you know, so they had to swim.

"If you want to succeed you must take. No matter how hard it is, no matter how much better something make yourself finish what you undertake. No matter how hard it is, no matter how much better something else looks, do what you have started to do.

"Get the habit, boys, and success is half won. It is very tempting to try to do a half dozen things without finishing any of them, but this is the road to failure. Center your mind on the thing before you, and do it—and do it the best you can."—The Boy's World.

SPORTS FOR CHILDREN.

There are many children's games of ancient origin. Among these is the game of hare and hounds. This sport, which is still played by the coming generation, originated in England about 1640.

The childish amusement of riding a cane is of great antiquity. It was practised by the children of Greece and ancient Rome.

The game of hide and seek is another youthful pastime of ancient origin. It came from Europe about the beginning of the seventeenth century.

Leap-frog is mentioned in the works of both Shakespeare and Johnson. It has been played by children from early times, and is still a favorite game with boys.

The game of seeing who can hop the longest on one foot came from the ancient Greeks, where it was practised by the youths for wagers.

Skipping rope is a childish pastime of ancient origin. In place of a rope, a vine stripped of leaves was originally used.

The spinning of tops, a favorite amusement among children in the spring, also came from the Greeks. Records show that this kind of fun was in vogue at the time of Virgil.

The flying kite derived its name from its originally being made to resemble that species of bird called a kite. The amusement of kite flying is about two centuries old in Europe. Probably it originated in China, where, so records tell, the practice of flying kites is very ancient.

Blind man's buff is another child's game which found its origin with the Greeks, among whom it was often indulged in by adults.

ANCIENT TRICKS.

The arts of juggling were, as has been proved by learned writers, of high antiquity. The Hirpini, who lived near Rome, jumped through burning coals; women in early times were accustomed to walk over burning coals in Cappadocia, and the exhibition of balls and cups is often mentioned in the works of the ancients.

It was as far back as the third century that one Firmus, or Firmius, who endeavored to make himself Emperor in Egypt, suffered a smith to forge iron on an anvil placed on his breast; and rope-dancers with balancing-poles are mentioned by Petronius and others; while the various feats of horsemanship exhibited in our circuses passed, in the thirteenth century, from Egypt to the Byzantine court, and thence over all Europe.

MARBLE-PLAYING.

Children played marbles on the streets many years ago. Playing-marbles have been found among the ruins of Pompeii.

Originally this child's amusement came from Holland, and was introduced into England about 1630. The marbles were made of clay, stone, and agate, and so extensive was the call for them that they came to be considered important articles of trade in Germany.

Catarrh Cannot Be Cured

LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

General Nogi, of Port Arthur fame, is losing the penalty of popularity at the hands of the autograph seekers. The form which this has taken in Japan has about it a touch of sentimentalism as the relatives of soldiers who fell before Port Arthur are asking the general's autograph inscriptions to place on the tombstones of the dead.

THE DOCTOR'S WISE
Disagrees with Him About Food.

A trained nurse says: "In the practice of my profession I have found so many points in favor of Grape-Nuts that I unhesitatingly recommend it to all my patients.

"It is delicate and pleasing to the taste, is essential in food for the sick and can be adapted to all ages. Cream softened with milk or cream for babies or the aged when deficiency of digestion renders mastication impossible. Even fever patients or those on liquid diet relish I find Grape-Nuts and albumen water a very nourishing an drefreshing drink. The recipe is my own idea and is made as follows: Soak a teaspoonful of Grape-Nuts in a glass of water for one hour, strain and serve with the well beaten white of an egg and a spoonful of fruit juice or flavoring. This affords a great deal of nourishment that can be given the weakest stomach can assimilate without any distress.

"My husband is a physician and he prescribes Grape-Nuts himself and orders it for many times for his patients.

"Personally I regard a dish of Grape-Nuts with fresh or stewed fruit as the ideal breakfast for anyone—well or ill."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

For any case of stomach trouble, nervous prostration or brain fag, a 10 days' trial of Grape-Nuts will work wonders toward nourishing and rebuilding, and in this way ending the trouble. "There's a reason," and trial proves.

WORTH QUOTING

James J. Hill, a giant among railway men, and a keen observer of all phases of our nation's growth, estimates that by 1910 the population of the United States will be 100,000,000. He draws an inspiring future and states some colossal facts regarding railroading.

The New York Telegram is glad that William J. Sherring, a Canadian, won that Marathon road race at Athens, because it has shown us how the Dominion treats her favorite sons. Sherring, who was a Grand Trunk brakeman, at $30 a month, was given more than $5,000 in cash, a deed for a house and lot and a government position at $750 a year. "Our Lady of the Snows" is at least appreciative.

In a recent speech, Mr. Seddon, Premier of New Zealand, said he had no desire to offend in any way the national susceptibilities of the Japanese, but New Zealand's racial purity must be preserved, and this could only be done by preventing Asiatics, whether subjects of King Edward or of the Mikado, from coming into the colony in such numbers as to constitute a real menace.

The reported verdict of the military court which is cleaning up some of the Russian refuse of the war with Japan, decreeing the penalty of death to General Stoessel and Admiral Nebogatoff, is rather shocking to civilized nerves, states the Boston Post. "Scratch a Russian and you find a Tartar," was a "mot" of the first Napoleon. And here is an instance confirmatory.

Representations are made to the President that the foreign trade has been damaged by the reports that the Beef Trust kills diseased cattle and sells it to consumers abroad. Some recent disclosures tend to show, opines the New York Press, that in this matter the Beef Trust does not discriminate against foreign consumers, but quite impartially puts tainted meat on the domestic market as well.

The Hartford Courant observes: We hear a great deal from the philosophers and wise men about what the corporation has done for the advancement of society. There is one influence that it has exerted with mighty force of which the philosophers seem to fight very shy. That is the undermining of the sense of responsibility. The essence of the modern corporation is limited liability; it is device for escaping responsibility.

In Arabia, shut out from all the world by their deserts and mountain fastnesses, the people have maintained their independence since the dawn of history; but some day the machine gun will appear upon the skirmish line Then the fate of the mad Mullah and the confident Mahdi will overtake the tribes of the desert, unless they forestall fate and provide themselves with the destructive enginery of what we call civilization.

Healthful living in crowded surroundings, such as those of a great city, requires not so much curative action as intelligent regulation of ventilation, says Dr. W. P. Northrup, in the Medical Record. As this writer puts it, we as a people can lay claim to being clean. Though we eat too much and sleep too little, we do wash about right. But, as for breathing, "our rooms are practically bell jars," and we must wait for later decades to realize the vital necessity of fresh air.

France has emphasized at its second election the decisive verdict of the people against socialism, anarchism, imperialism and monarchism, and in favor of the Republic. There is encouragement for Russia in the history of France, which has suffered the most extreme atrocities of despotism and of revolution, and now is peaceful and prosperous under a government by the people.

Says the Atlanta Constitution: The Panama Canal is fraught with such weighty interest to the country, and especially to the south, that its type of construction should not be settled hastily or without mature deliberation. But in view of the attention already given this phase, and the further fact that the time is approaching when indecision may mean expensive delay, wisdom and expediency seem to indicate the necessity of a congressional declaration before the expiration of the present term.

Americans are no longer confining their summer jaunts to nearby neighborhoods. They are visiting Europe by thousands and tens of thousands and learning something of the Old World. They are journeying to the far West and becoming acquainted with the scenic grandeur of their own land. They are penetrating Canada and seeing the wonders of the great Northwest. They are studying Mexico and its relics of a people of the past. And all in all it composes a great educational force of benefit to the country at large.

Certain perfumes are said to aid health by destroying disease microbes. Of these, thyme, lemon, mint, lavender, eucalyptus and attar of roses are the most useful.

Making Clothespins.

Few persons ever wonder where clothespins come from; few ever heard of Bryant's Pond, Me., and yet a man there has been quietly turning trees into clothespins for years and supplying the world with them, amassing in the process as comfortable a fortune as many a man makes in a more pretentious business in some money centers. His name is Lewis Mann, and he began with a capital of $400, with which he purchased an old disused mill and began the manufacture of clothespins. Today he is the largest individual maker of this very necessary article in the world.

How large the clothespin industry really is may be gathered from the fact that no less than 1,250,000 five gross boxes are manufactured every year in the United States alone. Much of the best machinery now used by Mr. Mann is the result of his own inventive genius and that of his son Edwin. Mr. Mann's machines turn out 30,000,000 pail handles, while of high grade clothespins they produce more than 50,000 five-gross boxes, or 36,000,000 a year.

The Deadliest Snake.

The deadliest of snakes is said to be the mamba, an African cobra. It flies at everybody and everything; it goes out of its way to quarrel; it will even come down from a tree to solicit an interview. Over in India there is the great king cobra, or Hamadryad, a size larger, quite as fierce. It has been known to chase a man on horseback. He had to ride for his life. But his poison is a degree less virulent. The difference, however, may be considered negligible and ceases to interest the patient after a few minutes. Among the Australian cobras the pit vipers, of America, and the great West African vipers there are species with evil reputations, and the most alarming feature is that the aggressive snakes are all desperately poisonous.

Ice Cream from Oil.

To make vanilla ice cream by artificial means, the alchemist took some triple refined cottonseed oil and placed it in a centrifugal machine which moved at a velocity of 3,000 revolutions a minute. A beautiful emulsion was thereby produced, which was then frozen, chemically, of course. The flavor was obtained by the addition of vanillin, glucin and introbenzol. They say that ice cream composed as above is sold in many southern states, where cottonseed oil is more plentiful, and consequently cheaper than milk or cream. It is far from harmful, tastes good and does not melt as quickly as the genuine ice.

Chinese Bibles Cheap.

China's cheapest book is the New Testament in Chinese, published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. It costs fourpence to print and is sold at twopence. Copies in all the great Indian languages cost one penny (two cents) to print, and they are sold in India at one farthing (half a cent). The Bible is now the cheapest book in the world.

Concrete Is Lasting.

The borough surveyor of Yarmouth, England, reported officially the other day that there were seventy miles of concrete sidewalks in the town, some of which had been made as long ago as 1869, and presented no signs of wearing. He expected some of them would be in use a century.

Acting on observations made in the Russo-Japanese war, the German army henceforth will carry dark colored scabbards in lieu of the bright ones hitherto used.

French wine growers are more than ever convinced that hailstorms can be averted by the timely firing of cannon. In the Beaujolais district alone 462 cannon are now in use.

Professor Moissan declared at the Paris Academy of Science that he had succeeded in boiling copper at a temperature of 2,100 degrees by means of a powerful electric current.

The German emperor, who recently has added a Spanish uniform to his stock of clothes, has the biggest wardrobe of any sovereign in the world.

Snails Are Nutritious.

Compared with oysters, snails contain about 100 per cent more nutritious substance.

In the town of Tollesbury, England, a place of 2,000 inhabitants, there is only one physician and there is no druggist or dentist within nine miles.

NEWSPAPERS IN JAPAN.

Several Dailies Published in Tokio and Osaka Have Big Circulations.

In the matter of circulation the newspapers of Japan cannot compare with those of London, says the London Express. There are, however, quite a number of daily journals published in Tokio and Osaka which boast of daily issues running well into six figures. The journal with the best circulation in Japan is the Osaka Mainichi, which sells 220,000 copies a day. The Asahi, published in the same town, has nearly as large a circulation.

In Tokio the newspaper most widely read is the Hochi Shimbun (the Bulletin News), which sells 200,000 copies daily. The Hochi is the great opposition journal, the organ of Count Okuma, ex-Premier, and the most influential journal of the Elder Statesmen. Then there is the Jiji Shimpo, the Nichi Nichi, the Kohumin and the Ashi of Tokio, all with circulations of between 50,000 and 180,000. The Kokumin is the Government organ, and when peace was signed the angry inhabitants of Tokio, enraged at its attitude and acquiescence with the peace treaty, attacked the offices and nearly caused a serious outbreak.

The Jiji Shimpo is owned and edited by the son-in-law of Viscount Hayashi, the Japanese Minister in London, while the Nichi Nichi is now the property of Mr. Kato, formerly Minister to England, and its editor is a Christian, Mr. Yokoi, who is a member of the Japanese Parliament.

The daily newspapers of Japan are much cheaper than those of London, even in these days of the ascendency of the half-penny press. Most subscribers pay for their favorite newspaper monthly, and their subscriptions work out in some cases at a fraction of a farthing a day, and in none at more than a half-penny a day.

For small advertisements the highest rate is one shilling per line, while for large advertisements I have never heard of more than $125 a page being paid for one insertion.

The serial story has been a feature of the Japanese press for thirty years past.

The production of a newspaper, complicated though it is in England, is much more so in Japan. They cannot use the linotype machines for setting up articles. This must be done by hand, and as in the Japanese language there are some 50,000 different characters, of which 28,000 are in common daily use, it will be understood that the compositor has to be a man of no small skill and ability.

The type room of a Japanese newspaper is a large compartment, with shelves all around the four walls, and in setting copy the compositor has to run round and round the room picking out from the thousand of little receptacles the type he requires. It is at one and the same time both mental and physical exercise of a pretty strenuous description.

The staff of the Hochi consists of sixty-three editors, sub-editors and reporters. The staff is divided into some seven or eight departments, namely, army, navy, political, financial, economical, city, artistic and translating.

Walking and Running Best Exercise.

Writing of exercise for children in the Delineator, Dr. Grace Peckham Murray says: "When children are old enough there is no better exercise than brisk walking. To be of benefit it should be brisk enough to bring the blood to the surface, and to expand the lungs. Running exercises the endurance. Systematic running should enter more largely into the exercise for children. Running strengthens the heart, increases the breathing capacity, and develops the muscles of the whole body. Like all violent exercise in which children indulge, it should be taken under the supervision of a teacher to avoid overdoing.

"An ideal way for children to pass the summer is in camps under the judicious care of a teacher and guide who can enter into the games and feelings of the boys and girls. I believe in the same education in these matters for girls as for boys. They can then become acquainted with woodcraft, botany and geology and increase their health by tramps and explorations. The primitive, which exists in all, whether of younger or older growth, has a chance to show itself, and it improves the health, for it does not do for children any more than for adults to be too civilized."

Clever Retort.

An Irishman once met an Englishman who had an artificial leg. Being of a sympathetic nature, Pat inquired the cause of the loss of the limb, whereupon the Englishman said: "A short time ago I discovered that there was some Irish blood in my body and that it had settled in this leg, so I had it cut off." "'Tis a pity it didn't settle in your head," came the quick retort.

Ibsen's Inspirations.

Henrik Ibsen, the great Norwegian dramatist, was said to be unable to write unless he had on the table in front of him a tray containing a number of grotesque figures—a wooden bear, a tiny image of Mephistopheles, two or three cats (one playing the fiddle), and some rabbits.—London Mail.

The chief labor unions of Germany collect over $4,000,000 a year in dues.

It takes fifty of the Chinese edible birds' nests to weigh a pound, and the price per pound is about $40.

A BUDDING MUSIC CRITIC.

Western Editor Ventures Into Strange Fields.

The editor of a paper published in Little Rock was once in receipt of a complimentary copy of a musical composition by an Arkansas friend, says the Success Magazine.

Feeling that he was called upon to make some acknowledgment of the courtesy, the editor did so in this wise:

"As the editor of this paper doesn't know a demisemiquaver from a diapason, or a bass clef from a 'high C,' he will not, therefore, be expected to give an extended notice of this production. We can say, however that the type used in printing the composition is clear and plain, and that the paper appears to be of the best quality of rag. The design on the front page is most artistic, and the words are as tender as a real spring chicken and as poetic as the song of the meadow lark on a May morning. The melody is sound and all right, with no windgalls or collar marks. The harmony, too, appears to be strictly O. K., with no patent defects or noticeable blemishes. The tonality is clear and resonant, and rests on harmonic relations and melodic elements. This is about all the praise in connection with said composition we are able to evolve from our cabbage-flavored temperament."

WISE WORDS.

To love and serve all men is to delight in God.—Mencius (Chinese).

He who hurries cannot walk with a stately step.—From the Chinese.

Sometimes very large Goliaths go down before very small Davids.

The wolves in sheep's clothing are those who do good that evil may come.

But the day worker acquires more coin than the day dreamer.—Chicago News.

Keep your eyes open to your mercies. The man who forgets to be thankful has fall asleep in life.—Robert L. Stevenson.

The old days never come again, because they would be getting in the way of the new, better days, whose turn it is.—George Macdonald.

As a ray of light in a pure drop of water is divided into seven colors, so it is with love in a pure heart: it divides into more than sevenfold virtue; yea, rather all virtue springs from it alone. —Tholuck.

"Selfish irritability is a short cut to misery, but patience that lives not for self, but for the good of our fellow-men through supernatural charity, confers strength and fortitude, and leads, even here on earth, to the possession of even peace and happiness."

The higher nature in man rises above the power of this law of time. It does not grow old, does not decay, cannot die. We all have within us the principle of immortal youth. Thought is always young. Knowledge never grows old. Joy in the beauty of nature, in the work of daily duty, in the divine love, gives to age the charm of childhood.—James Freeman Clarke.

Look around the world to-day and see what some of the men who have long passed the "dead line" are doing, and what they have accomplished. Look at the young old military leaders in little Japan who conquered great Russia. Oyama was twenty years past this fatal line when he won his great victories, and all of his corps commanders were past fifty. The Marquis Ito, the Grand Old Man of Japan, her greatest statesman, and the one who has done more than any other to make Japan what it is to-day, is still active in the service of his country.—O. S. Marden.

Don't Feed the Dog.

Much meat is to the sporting dog's nose what strong drink is to the detective's eye—poison. The beginner in the field often does not realize this and nightly attributes his indifferent luck of the day to the scarcity of birds, when generous portions of beef or pot liquor are to blame.

Of course, when there is hard work to be done, a dog must be well nourished and its vitality kept up by giving it light morsels at frequent intervals, just as the man with the gun has to be sustained by good, wholesome food.

Two biscuits and water in the morning, a half biscuit several times a day and at night a hearty meal of well-cooked vegetables or oatmeal porridge form the best fare for a dog in the field. Remember, however, to give the portions of biscuits when water is near by, since dry crumbs create a thirst that frequently handicaps a dog as much as hunger.—Country Life in America.

The Corporal's Argument.

"Such reasoning," said General F. D. Grant in a military argument, "reminds me of the reasoning of old Corporal Sandhurst.

"Corporal Sandhurst was one day drilling a batch of raw recruits.

"'Why is it?' he said to a bright-looking chap, 'that the blade of your sabre is curved instead of straight?'

"'The blade is curved,' the recruit answered, 'in order to give more force to the blow.'

"'Nonsense,' said the corporal. 'The blade is curved so as to fit the scabbard. If it was straight how would you get it into the curved scabbard, you idiot?'"—Chicago Chronicle.

STOMACH CATARRH.

Miss Mary O'Brien, 306 Myrtle Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"Peruna cured me in five weeks of catarrh of the stomach, after suffering for four years and doctoring without effect. In common with other grateful ones who have been benefited by your discovery, I say, All hail to Peruna."

Mr. H. J. Henneman, Oakland, Neb., writes:

"I waited before writing to you about my sickness, catarrh of the stomach, which I had over a year ago.

"There were people who told me it would not stay cured, but I am sure that I am cured, for I do not feel any more ill effects, have a good appetite and am getting fat.

"So I am, and will say to all, I am cured for good.

"I thank you for your kindness.

"Peruna will be our house medicine hereafter."

Catarrh of the stomach is also known in common parlance as dyspepsia, gastritis and indigestion. No medicine will be of any permanent benefit except it removes the catarrh.

TORTURED WITH ECZEMA.

Tremendous Itching Over Whole Body —Scratched Until Bled—Wonderful Cure by Cuticura.

"Last year I suffered with a tremendous itching on my back, which grew worse and worse until it spread over the whole body, and only my face and hands were free. For four months or so I suffered torments, and I had to scratch, scratch, scratch until I bled. At night when I went to bed things got worse, and I had at times to get up and scratch my body all over until I was as sore as could be, and until I suffered excruciating pain. They told me that I was suffering from eczema. Then I made up my mind that I would use the Cuticura Remedies. I used them according to instructions, and very soon indeed I was greatly relieved. I continued until well, and now I am ready to recommend the Cuticura Remedies to any one. Mrs. Mary Metzger, Sweetwater, Okla., June 28, 1905."

Section 2. The following persons shall be disqualified both from registering and voting: All idiots and insane persons; those who were by reason of conviction of crime disqualified from voting at the time of the ratification of the constitution on November 28, 1901; those who have been since November 28, 1901, or who shall be convicted of treason, murder, arson, embezzlement, malfeasance in office, larceny, receiving stolen property, obtaining money under false pretenses, perjury, subornation of perjury, robbery, assault with intent to rob, burglary, forgery, bribery, assault and battery on wife, bigamy, living in adultery, sodomy, incest, rape, miscegenation, crime against nature, or any crime punishable by imprisonment in penitentiary, or for anw infamous crimes or crime involving moral turpitude; also any person who has been since November 28, 1901, or who shall be convicted as a vagrant or tramp, or of selling or offering to sell his vote or the vote of another, or of making or offering to make false returns in any election by the people or in any primary election to procure the nomination or election of any person to any office, or of suborning any witness or registrar to secure the registration of any person as an elector, provided that any person who is disqualified from voting by reason of conviction of any of the offenses mentioned in this section, except treason, whether the conviction was had in a State or Federal court, has been pardoned, may be restored to his citizenship with right to vote by the Governor, approved by the Board of Pardons and specially expressed in the pardon.

Sec. 7 1-2. The following persons and no others, who, if their place of residence shall remain unchanged, will have, at the date of the next general election the qualifications as to residence prescribed by section 1 of this act, shall be qualified to register as electors, provided they shall not be disqualified under section 2 of this act:

1st. Those who can read and write any article of the constitution of the United States in the English language, and who are physically unable to work; and those who can read and write any article of the constitution of the United States in the English language, and who have worked or been regularly engaged in some lawful employment, business or occupation, trade or calling for the greater part of the twelve months next preceding the time they offer to register, and those who are unable to read and write, is such inability is due solely to physical disability; or,

2nd. The owner in good faith in his own right, or the husband of a woman who is the owner in good faith in her own right, of forty acres of land situate in this State, upon which they reside; or the owner in good faith in his own right, or the husband of any woman who is the owner in good faith in her own right, of real estate situate in this State, assessed for taxation at the value of three hundred dollars or more or the owner in good faith, in his own right, or the husband of a woman who is the owner in good faith, in her own right, of personal property in this State assessed for taxation for three hundred dollars or more; provided, that the taxes due upon such real or personal property for the year next preceding the year in which he offers to register shall have been paid, unless the assessment shall have been legally contested and and undetermined.

Sec. 15. Any elector who registered prior to January 1, 1903, who has changed the county of his residence shall be registered on application on production of his certificate, unless he has since become disqualified.

Sec. 16. When the certificate of any elector who was duly registered has been lost, mutilated or destroyed, on application stating that the certificate has been lost, mutilated or destroyed, and verified by affidavit, and it appears of record that such applicant has been registered, the Judge of Probate of the county of registration or the Secretary of State shall issue to the applicant a certificate that he was duly registered as an elector. Such certificate shall be issued free of charge to the elector. The Secretary of State shall, at the expense of the State furnish the Judge of Probate blank certificates for use as provided in this section.

The certificate of the registrars or the Judge of Probate or of the Secretary of State shall be sufficient to establish the fact of such registration.

* * * * * * * * * *

Be sure and register when the registrars are in your beat, as the only excuse for not doing so is by reason of sickness of yourself or in your family, or by absence from the county. Everybody can register this summer who will be qualified by residence or age by the 8th day of November. Poll tax paying has nothing to do with registration; you can register now and pay your poll tax afterwards, but you cannot vote unless you are both registered and have paid your poll tax (if any is due). The period of residence necessary to register is two years in the State, one year in the county and three months in the beat. If you have moved from one beat to another in the county less than three months before election day, you can vote in your old beat, so you don't lose your vote by changing beats. Any one who desires to register on property qualification should take with him his last assessment sheet and tax collector's receipt to show to the registrars as proof that you are possessed of such property and pay taxes on it. You can register under ANY of the following heads:

1. If you own forty acres or more land in this State, and reside upon it.
2. If your wife owns forty acres or more land in this State, upon which you reside.
3. If you own real estate in this State that is assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
4. If your wife owns real estate in this State assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
5. If you own personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
6. If your wife owns personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
7. If you can read and write any section of the constitution of the United States.

Don't give up your life certificate that you got in 1902; you only have to show it to the registrars in case you have moved to this county from some other county.

THE UNION will furnish any one information on any special points that they may be in doubt upon, and stands ready to help any one to get all the rights he is entitled to under the laws of Alabama. If you think you are entitled to register and the registrars should refuse you, take a couple of good men with you so you can have witnesses as to such refusal and the reasons given by the registrars, and thereby be enabled to take your case upto high authority. tf

LETTER FROM F. J. FITTS.

Maplesville, Ala., June 12, 1906.

To the Voters of Chilton County:

In this issue of The Union will be found my announcement for sheriff of Chilton county, subject to the action of the People's primary.

I expect to make an active canvass of the county before the primary is held, and I shall endeavor to see as many of the voters as it is practical for me to do—especially those who have pledged their allegiance to the People's cause, the cause of right and justice.

It is hardly necessary here for me to state what my political convictions are. They are proven by my works in the past. The first ballot I ever cast was for the nominee of the People's party, and the first political work I ever did was rendered in behalf of the People's party. I have never deviated from this course nor receded from the position originally taken. I have never deserted the cause of the people nor battled against it in the ranks of the enemy. When dark clouds were hovering around us and defeat seemed to be staring us in the face because of the unfaithfulness of some whom we had honored by electing them to office, my faith in the righteousness of our cause remained undiminished, and I have ever been steadfast in defending the interests of the people.

With a straight record for party loyalty behind me, and an honest purpose in view, it is with some measure of hope that I submit my claims to the determination of the people. If I am your nominee my heart will go out to you in deepest gratitude; if some other candidate receives the honor and by your votes you declare him your nominee, he shall have my unqualified support, and I pledge him my very best efforts to elect him by an overwhelming majority.

Respectfully,

tf F. J. FITTS.

Forty-six Years With Broken Neck.

New York.—George Knox broke his neck and fractured his skull forty-six years ago. Saturday it was announced he died at his home here in his 91st year.

A heavy cornice fell on Knox one day in the summer of 1860 while he was passing a building in course of erection at Ninth avenue and Twenty-sixth street. His neck was broken and his skull was fractured. Doctors declared he could not live more than twenty-four hours. They were astounded when they found a week later that Knox was not only living, but gaining strength. None of them could explain how it was possible for Knox to live with a broken neck, and they were even more surprised to find that no part of his body was paralyzed. After being treated at St. Luke Hospital for two years Mr. Knox was able to return to his business, although the vertebra of his neck had not joined together. While in St. Louis he met with an accident which resulted in the forming of a cataract in his left eye. On account of his neck the physicians did not dare to operate, and he lost his sight in that city. Mr. Knox until 1885, when he retired, was in the wholesale wrapping paper business.

Kansas City Closed.

Kansas City.—Every saloon in Kansas City, Kan., was closed Saturday, and at the club houses of the Elks and Eagles no liquor was sold.

Assistant Attorney-General Trickett's threat to destroy the buildings used as joints had proven effective. During the night the bar fixtures and stocks of liquors were removed from many places to the Missouri side.

A dozen saloons in the suburbs of Armourdale, Argentine and Rosedale still remained open, but they may eventually be closed. These latter were operated by a Missouri brewing company, now in the hands of a receiver, and Attorney-General Trickett wished to feel his ground before proceeding against them. The fixtures from one saloon owned by this company had been destroyed by the sheriff, however, notwithstanding threats of the owner to secure a restraining order from the federal court.

Would Oust Company.

St. Louis, Mo.—Circuit Attorney Sager, acting for the state of Missouri, has instituted quo warranto proceedings in the circuit court against the Cella Commission Company, of St. Louis, to oust that company and all its franchises and privileges from the state of Missouri, and asking that all its privileges be declared forfeited and that its property be forfeited to the state. The petition alleges that ever since its organization the Cella Commission Company has violated the laws of this state and has perverted and misused its corporate authority, franchises and privileges, and has unlawfully assumed and usurped franchises and privileges not granted to it by the laws of the state of Missouri. The company's officers are named in Gould's business directory as F. J. Miner, president and treasurer; C. A. Tiller, vice-president, and P. A. Stephens, secretary.

Killed District Attorney.

Philadelphia, a.—"I would not take that trip over again for $1,000," said J. W. Sholley, district attorney of Bucks county, as he emerged from one of the cars of the scenic railway, "over the mountains," at Willow Grove Park. He took a few steps forward, said he felt faint and dizzy and fell in the arms of friends.

A physician was quickly summoned, but before he arrived Mr. Sholley was dead. The doctor said his heart had been affected. Mr. Sholley occupied a prominent position at the bar of the state and was widely known. He was unmarried.

Verdict Set Aside.

Montgomery, Ala.—Judge A. D. Sayre, of the city court of Montgomery, has made an order setting aside the verdict of a jury in that court on June 16, whereby Campbell Jones, former superintendent of streets of Montgomery, was awarded a judgment of $10,000 damages against the Advertiser Company in an action for libel.

Mr. Jones sued the Advertiser Company because of an interview with J. G. Brown, a contractor, published in the Advertiser during March, 1905, in which statements were made damaging to the official character of Mr. Jones. Subsequently Mr. Jones was exonerated and the Advertiser published the details of his exoneration.

A week ago counsel for the Advertiser filed a motion with Judge Sayre for a new trial. Judge Sayre granted the motion and set aside the jury verdict.

The King of England has in Asia more than 300,000,000 subjects; in America, 7,500,000; in Africa, about 43,000,000; in Australasia, over 5,000,000, and in Europe, over 42,000,000.

ARE CONFIDENT.

The Czar is Urged by the Democrats to Dissolve Douma.

NO HOPE NOW FOR GOREMYKIN.

Parliament, However, Is Confident of Its Strength and Is Biding Its Time.

St. Petersburg.—The uppermost question now is how long the present deadlock between parliament and the government can continue. Premier Goremykin is no longer a factor in the situation, but some of his colleagues, headed by Minister of Agriculture Stichinisky, realizing that unless the government fights the cabinet must fall, are earnestly advising the emperor to take the bull by the horns and dissolve parliament.

They have submitted a memorandum to the emperor advising him to take this course on the ground that parliament has ceased to be a legislative body and is simply the center of revolutionary agitation and urging that immediate action is necessary.

They contended that the army as a whole can still be relied upon. Finance Minister Kokavsoff and Minister of Justice Chicheglovitoff, on the other hand, consider that an attempt to forcibly dissolve parliament would be fatal. The former, who is ambitious to become premier, seems to be championing the formation of a mixed, responsible ministry in the hope that the emperor will charge him to undertake its formation.

In the meantime it is announced that the cruise which the emperor and his family will take in Finnish waters will be made at the end of next week. The imperial yacht will be escorted by two warships.

The constitutional democrats in parliament appear confident that victory in their fight for a responsible ministry is not far off and with the prospects of acceding to power becoming brighter the breach between them and the radicals in parliament is getting broader. The latter, as shown during Friday's debate, seems to have thrown off the mask and desire to make parliament practically the central revolutionary committee for the country and have it assist in the convocation of a constituent assembly, while the constitutional democrats would be satisfied with a constitutional monarchy, which they believe to be assured if they get the reins in their hands.

The members of the deputation from the group of toil sent into the country districts to test the temper of the peasants have returned and report that the latter are even more anxious for the signal to rise. The delegates counseled patience until August.

The estate in Oral province of Prince Svaitopolk-Mirsky, the former minister of the interior, has been burned by peasants. Cossacks have been dispatched to the scene.

MM. Anniken and Alladin, the peasant leaders in parliament, have received a warning from "the League for the Salvation of Russia" that they have been sentenced to death.

A sergeant belonging to the Onego regiment, which has just returned from the Baltic regions, where it participated in the suppression of the revolutionary disorders, was killed in front of his company at Krasnoe-Salo camp. The company was presumed to fire a round of blank cartridges, but the sergeant fell dead with a bullet through his body. There is no doubt that he was killed by design.

Hot in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The hot wave continues in this city. The official government thermometer at 8 o'clock Saturday morning registered 84 degrees, 6 degrees higher than that recorded at the same hour the day before.

Duel in Crowded Street.

New York.—Four Italian tradesmen of the Italian colony of Brooklyn who had been cutting prices on their wares assembled at the corner of Vanbrunt and Union streets, Brooklyn, to talk over market conditions. In a short time a four-handed pistol conflict was in progress, in which one of the men was probably fatally wounded. The other three were more or less seriously injured, and a bystander, who had no part in the fight, received a bullet in the leg.

The street was crowded at the time and a panic ensued when the fight started. Detachments of police were hurriedly sent from two police stations to arrest the combatants and restore order.

TO CONTROL FARMS.

Capitalists Say They Will Be Able to Give Better Prices to Producer and Also Aid Consumer.

New York.—The Herald says:

Backed by unlimited capital, and supported by many of the most prominent financiers of the country, another trust, known as the American Farm Products Company, established for the purpose of taking absolute control of all dairy products, chickens and eggs, has been planted on American soil.

It is asserted by those who control the American Farm Products that it will bring about an increased and uniform price to the producer, a diminished price to the consumer, giving him a superior and purer grade of dairy products, and vastly improving present methods of distribution.

The commission merchants' profit will be eliminated, and the great corporation will take the responsibility of delivering butter and milk from the hands of the farmer to the hands of the consumer.

Behind the great enterprise are a score of the wealthiest men in America, who already have put in about $20,000,000 and are prepared to "chip in additional millions," as they are required. Among the eastern capitalists interested in the trust are:

Levi P. Morton, Thomas F. Ryan, Harry Payne Whitney, Anthony Brady, E. J. Barwin, Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and several other large banking houses and individual capitalists. The offices of the company are at No. 52 Broadway. At a meeting of the board of directors held June 25 the following officers were elected: President, J. R. Morse; first vice-president, Henry D. Cook; second vice-president, H. L. Wiley; treasurer, Grant Hugh Brown; secretary, Eugene Delmar.

At the first annual meeting of the stockholders held in New York a statement was issued showing that the company has a capital stock of $15,000,000 of common stock, $2,000,000 of preferred stock and $2,000,000 debenture bonds.

Minnesota Protests.

San Francisco, Cal.—Mayor Schmitz has received a telegram from Governor Johnson, of Minnesota, protesting against the sale of flour donated by his state for the fire sufferers here. The mayor as yet has taken no action on Governor Johnson's protest. It is claimed by General Greely that the donations of flour received are in excess of all possible needs and it was deemed the best plan to dispose of it rather than pay storage on thousands of barrels, especially as storage facilities are limited. Seven hundred and fifty thousand pounds were reserved, which it is estimated will be sufficient for the needs of the sufferers for six months. On the other hand, it is also claimed that many people desire the flour distributed as was intended by the donors and that applications for it have been granted.

The relief committee declares that the proceeds from the sale of flour, which amount to over a quarter of a million dollars, will be used for more pressing needs of relief.

Street Duel.

Raleigh, N. C.—A special from Columbia, S. C., says: W. O. Tatum, dispensary commissioner, has just received information from Orangeburg that J. T. Parks, auditing clerk of the state dispensary, and R. H. Cover, business manager of the Orangeburg Patriot, were mortally wounded there in a street duel. Both men were shot through the body.

Parks formerly owned the Patriot and sold it to Covar. The shooting affair is the result of trouble over the settlement. Parks is secretary of the democratic executive committee and is a native of Edgefield county.

Gets Another Reprieve.

Jefferson City, Mo.—F. Seymour (Lord) Barrington's case is to be heard by the United States supreme court. Chief Justice Brace has signed a writ of error, and an appeal will at once be made to the supreme court of the United States. This stops all proceedings and Barrington will not hang July 26.

New York.—Some anxiety is felt for the safety of the French steamship Amerika, of the Fabrie line, which sailed from Marseilles on June 3, touched at St. Michaels for coal and sailed thence June 11. The Amerika should have arrived here June 23. Her agents say they are not greatly alarmed, and believe that some part of her machinery has given out. The Amerika has four cabin and 110 steerage passengers and a crew of about forty. She is loaded with macaroni, olive oil, dried fish and skins.

The Amerika was formerly the steamship Britannia, built at Liverpool in 1881. She is an iron ship of 2,624 tons gross and 1,569 tons net, 285 feet long, 40 feet 4 inches beam and 23 feet 9 inches depth, brigantine rigged.

INTERCHANGE.

The oriole sang in the apple tree;
The sick girl lay on her bed, and heard
The tremulous note of the glad wild bird;
And "Ah!" she sighed, "to share with thee
Life's rapture exquisite and strong;
Its hope, its eager energy,
Its fragrance and its song!"

The oriole swayed in the apple tree,
And he sang: "I will build, with my love, a nest,
Fine as e'er welcomed a birdling guest;
Like a pendant blossom, secure yet free,
It shall hang from the bough above me there,
Bright, bright with the gold that is combed for me
From the sick girl's auburn hair."

Then he built the nest in the apple tree,
And, burnished over, a ball of light,
It gleamed and shone in the sick girl's sight,
And she gazed upon it wonderingly;
But when the bird had forever flown,
They brought the nest from the apple tree
To the bed where she lay alone.

"Oh, builder of this mystery!"
The wide and wistful eyes grew dim,
And the soul of the sick girl followed him—
"Dear bird! I have had part, through thee,
In the life for which I long and long;
Have shared its hope, its energy,
Its rapture and its song!"

..A MARINE MAN-TRAP..

By Albert W. Tolman.

ONE of the favorite hunting grounds for the student of marine life is the Great Barrier Reef of Australia, that coralline wall which stretches for 1200 miles from northwest to southeast along the eastern verge of the island continent.

Upon its summit flourish varied form of ocean life from the tropic and temperate zones. Here are rare shells, delicate sponges, seaweeds yet unnamed. Strange, brilliant fish find their way amidst the branchy coral. Deep in cave-like fastnesses lurk uncouth monsters, all eyes and arms and jaws, alert to seize their incautious prey. Around and beneath, their labors affording a resting place and a refuge for all this teeming life, the tiny builders are still busy.

Near the end of November, 1894, Crosby Wilson, an English scientist, had come up the Great Barrier in a small Melbourne schooner to make a collection of shells. A reserved and silent man of forty-five, he was an expert conchologist, whose discoveries were of world-wide interest, although his name was barely known outside the circle of his intimate friends.

One morning Wilson planned a lonely ramble over the reef. His vessel was safely anchored in a cove south of one of the few small islands that rear their heads along the Barrier. Fifteen minutes' rowing in the dingey with the mate and two sailors brought him to the spot where he desired to land. The sea was calm, and it was not difficult to approach close to the edge of the reef. The scientist stepped overboard into the few inches of water that covered the coral.

"Mind your steps, sir," said the mate, as the boat rowed away.

Wilson thanked him for his warning, although it was little needed. It was by no means his first visit to the Great Barriers. He was perfectly familiar with its perils.

It was a beautiful morning. Over the half submerged coral the sea rippled gently. Eastward a flock of gulls floated above the placid ocean. Fish broke in the lagoon. Half a mile away a school of sperm whales bound southward were spouting.

The conchologist was a tall, thin man, and as he stalked solemnly to and fro through the shallows, with spectacles astride of his long, beak-like nose, and making an occasional stoop, he looked for all the world like a crane or heron. He wore a pair of hip boots, made especially thick to protect him from the bites of fish and crabs. Whenever he discovered a desirable shell he dropped it into a net of small rope which one of the sailors had knotted. By the time the tide turned he had almost filled this. He began to make his way slowly toward the island.

One of the commonest forms of life on the Great Barrier is the giant clam, or Tridacna gigas. These bivalves lie with their huge mouths gaping wide to catch the food swept over them by the sea current. The strength of their muscles is prodigious, and woe to the unlucky object that is caught between their shells. Wilson knew well the peril he might incur by an incautious step. He kept a sharp lookout as he walked along.

Just beyond a little pool a rare conch caught the scientist's attention. In the joy of discovery, with his eyes fastened on his find, he stepped upon what looked like a bank of weed. Unfortunately this concealed the open jaws of a large clam. Down went Wilson's right leg almost to the knee. Instantly the shell snapped together and he was trapped. As the strong, sharp jaws closed the Englishman could not repress a yell of pain. He did not need to look down to learn what had gripped him. Without wasing time in useless struggling he flung the bag from his shoulder and cast about for means to extricate himself.

Less than a mile to the south, above the little island, the sun glinted on the schooner's white sails. How he wished the low mound lower still. But it was high enough to hide the vessel's hull, and to prevent the crew from seeing his gestures.

The torture of the sharp edged shells was excruciating. They held his leg as firmly as a vise, not permitting the slightest motion. But for his thick boot they would have cut the flesh to the bone. He writhed with pain. Oh, for a pry of some sort, a steel bar to thrust between those remorseless jaws and compel them to relax their grip. Then he remembered his stout clasp knife, and drew it hopefully from his pocket.

He did not attempt to chip away the edges of the shell. The enamel was, he knew, too hard for the steel. He hoped, however, to cut the byssus, or bunch of tough filaments that held the clam to the reef, or even to insert his blade between the hinged teeth at the bottom of the two great fluted valves, and sever the powerful muscles that operated them. But after considerable groping about and pushing aside of the overhanging weed he found the base of the shellfish so deeply embedded in the coral that his scheme appeared futile.

Wilson dropped to a sitting posture, stretching his left leg out horizontally over the rough surface. He could reach round in a circle with a five-foot radius. But in that space there was nothing to help him, no loose rock that would enable him to pry the shells apart.

The rising tide now rippled three or four inches deep about him. An easterly breeze had already sprung up. He knew how rapidly the sea made under the influence of the trade wind. His only hope seemed to be in the speedy return of the boat.

He was ready to die for science if his death could do any good, but he much preferred to live for it.

A pang smote him as he remembered the unfinished classifications that he had hoped to complete on this trip. Who would make them if he were taken away?

His powers of observation were painfully sharpened by his danger. He recognized a dozen different species of algae. He saws a school of little fish nosing the shells in his net. He noted, too, that the water had risen slightly during the last few minutes. Again he strained his eyes southward, but the gleaming sail above the island gave no sign of succor.

Still the tide rose. The water now was nearly to his breast. Unless help came soon he could not hope to escape.

The bag was just within his reach. He drew it toward him, knotted his watch and rings into his handkerchief and tied it to one of the coarse strands. He also put in the bag his notebook in its rubber pocket. At any rate the results of his observations should be preserved for science.

The billows were beginning to break upon the Barrier. A great, green, white crested roller raced in across the coral and dashed over his head, leaving him gasping for breath. Another and another did the same.

Anything was better than perishing without an effort. He thought again of assailing the tough strands that held the clam to the coral. To reach them he was obliged to thrust his head well under water. This time his fingers found a more promising spot for an attack. Hack! hack! hack! With desperate, slashing strokes he drew his knife across the stout filaments. How fearfully tough and thick they were. He straightened up, grasped the reef with both hands, braced his left foot and pulled mightily. Was he mistaken or was that really a tremor beneath him?

Again he bent down and cut away, once, twice, thrice, pulling hard after each attempt. Each time there was a little yielding. The fourth effort pulled the strands entirely clear, and he fell splashing backward upon the reef, with the great clam clinging to his foot.

For a little while the revulsion of feeling was too much for him and he almost fainted. Then he came to the realization that he was by no means out of danger. Although torn from its bed the huge shellfish did not relax its hold. Indeed, it seemed to nip him harder than ever. He felt almost as if his leg were being bitten off.

He looked to the south, and with a thrill of hope beheld a small white sail near the corner of the island. The dingey was coming back. He shouted madly. In that wind his voice could not carry a fraction of the distance. But perhaps the men on board might realize his danger if he could only attract their attention. He waved his arms wildly about his head.

Wilson was still in desperate plight. His right foot was enclosed between the ponderous shells. Their weight dragged him down. He could neither swim nor walk. The water was too deep to allow him to crawl on his hands and knees, dragging the monstrous clam behind him. He could not stand upright firmly enough to resist the onset of the seas. A big comber caught him in the back and sent him rolling and tumbling over the face of the reef. If he was swept into the lagoon he would assuredly be drowned.

He arrested himself by catching with both hands a sharp knob of coral. Then he managed to prop himself upright and get his head above water. Every finger was bleeding

Again he glanced toward the boat. It was much nearer and coming with all speed. A man in the bow waved an arm and then came the hollow bellow of the megaphone:

"Keep up! Keep up! We're coming!"

Wilson could recognize the mate's hoarse voice, magnified by the instrument. Help was still half a mile off. Could it reach him in time?

The next few minutes were agonizing ones for the Englishman. With every ounce of energy that he possessed he strove to prevent himself from being swept into the lagoon. But he could not help yielding to the seas, and every one hammered him a little nearer the brink of the coral wall. He knew that there the water fell sharply off to thirty feet. A plunge over its edge and the great bivalve would drag him down to death.

During his brief but desperate fight he was conscious that the boat was rapidly drawing nearer. The megaphone still shouted encouragement to him. At last it sounded only a few feet away. He cast a glance seaward. There was the boat, running rapidly along the outer edge of the reef. Its crew did not dare to approach too near, for the rollers would shatter the dingey on the coral rock.

Fortunately the mate was familiar with a passage not a hundred yards away. Throwing down the megaphone he called out to Wilson, his voice sounding strangely weak and low after the instrument had been discarded. With oars and sail the boat was urged on. In a short time she had made the passage, and had turned back, skirting the inner edge of the reef.

Wilson was now about ten feet from the brink. A huge curler foamed up above him. Cling as desperately as he might it tore his hold away, and rolled him toward the deep water. He felt his last hope slipping from him. It was hard to die on the verge of certain rescue.

But the boat had ridden safely through the swells and was now at the very edge of the wall. The mate caught sight of an upflung arm. Leaping over on the coral he rushed to the spot, while the sailors held the dingey in place with their oars. Before another roller could break the half drowned scientist, shell and all, was half lifted, half dragged on board. It was a matter of a few moments for the men to release his bruised but otherwise uninjured leg from the clutch of the great clam.—Youth's Companion.

The forest service of the Department of Agriculture has issued statistics of the crossties purchased by the steam railroad companies during 1905. The total number of ties reported is 80,051,000, of which 22,569,000, or 26 per cent., were to be used for the construction of new track. As 95 per cent. of the railway mileage reported, the total number of ties used by the steam railways would be 84,400,000, representing nearly 3,000,000,000 feet of lumber, board measure.

From Australia comes the proposition to employ mica for the powder chamber of cartridges. The alleged advantages are that the quality of the powder could be judged through its transparent covering; that on account of the resistance of mica to heat the temperature of the gun would not rise so rapidly with firing as is the case when ordinary cartridges are used, and, finally, that in employing mica cartridges it would never be necessary to grease the breech of the gun.

According to recent experiments in one of the scientific bureaus at Washington the temperature of the incandescent filament in an ordinary electric lamp varies between 2489 degrees and 2890 degrees Fahrenheit. This is perceptibly lower than the melting point of iron, which is about 1600 degrees centigrade, or 2912 degrees Fahrenheit. But with carbon fibres a little thicker than ordinary, giving a little brighter light, it is thought that the temperature may rise to 2962 degrees Fahrenheit, or fifty degrees above the melting point of iron.

An apparatus which may enable the record of a phonograph to be understood independently of the sense of hearing has been contrived by a British scientist. With this apparatus the revolving phonographic cylinder is caused to produce variations of intensity in a weak electric current, and these variations, when conducted through the hands, which have been moistened for the purpose, are easily perceived. Since they correspond with the sound variations, it is thought that by their aid a person totally deaf could appreciate the rhythm and character of a succession of sounds thus transformed into a series of sensations of a different kind.

CROW THAT WILL BE MISSED.

People of an Iowa Town Mourn Bird With Astounding Profane Vocabulary.

"The swearing crow," long a feature of Primghar, Iowa, and known as Jim Crow, has just died and the boys and girls are in mourning. Jim Crow was about four years old and was brought to the park where he was raised and where he learned to talk equal to most any parrot. He took up his abode in the barn of Joseph Nye, near the public square, and soon became an expert in talking and especially in swearing. The bird was a wonder to everybody who knew him. When the ball games were on Jim was always on hand and would shout and squawk for the Primghar nine just like the rooters when a good hit was made or a home run accomplished.

He went and came as he pleased and did not molest anybody until last year, when he took a wonderful liking for the young chickens, and this is what brought him to a premature grave. His master had just kept him shut up in the barn to keep him from pilfering, but a traveling man who wished to hear him talk and swear let him out in a spirt of mischief, and Jim made a bee line for a poultry yard and proceeded to fill up on spring chickens. The owner of the poultry yard became enraged at Jim's acts of larceny and confiscation and shot him.

No one will be more missed in Primghar than Jim Crow, as he was an exceptional bird and a great attraction to visitors by his talking and swearing. His owner intends to have him mounted and placed in the public museum of Primghar.—Eldorado Correspondence St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Error in Phrenology.

They were enthusiasts in physiognomy and phrenology, and were traveling by train. On the opposite seat was a man of commanding figure, massive brow and serious expression.

"What a fine countenance, Arthur! I wish I knew his occupation."

"Perhaps he's a lawyer, Edith."

"No, he's not a lawyer. There's too much benevolence in that face for a lawyer. He may be a banker."

"I am sure he is not! A man with such a heavenly expression couldn't content himself with money getting. His aim in life is higher."

"Well, do you think he can be an editor?"

"An editor, with such a face! An editor, saying hard things about everybody, ridiculing women's dresses and abusing mothers-in-law! An editor, cutting and slashing his enemies, slaying public men indiscriminately, and mercilessly slaughtering his best friends for the sake of a paragraph! No, Arthur, he's a philanthropist. His face plainly indicates that he is all that is good, noble, pure and true."

At the next station an inquisitive old fellow took a seat beside the man with the noble brow, says London Tit-Bits, and asked him his vocation. The couple opposite held their breath. He replied:

"I've a hotel bar and a butcher shop. My wife looks after the bar, and I do my own killin'."

Ins and Outs.

The two young men reached the door at the same time. "Is Miss Swellington in?" they asked. The maid, Norah, looked at them and shook her head disconsolately.

"She's in to wan av ye an' out to th' other," she said at last; "but th' two av ye comin' together has got me so tangled O'm blest if Oi know which is which. But come roight in, both av ye, an' Oi'll ax her to come down an' pick ye out."—Judge.

...speeding onward to their play,
...their merry cries,
...tears shall fade away

The dusty yokel, worn and tasked,
Tramped to me from the road,
Gripped hands with me, and all unasked
The grateful waters flowed.
The cup held by its clanking chain
He lifted oft and drained
Its crystal waters once again,
And some new vigor gained.

And, ah! those patient beasts that brought
Their noses to my tank,
When the red sun beat fiercely hot
And drank, and drank, and drank
With mighty draughts and deep until
My labors were nigh vain
To give them drink enough and fill
My water tub again.

Nor all my score of years till now
Have I once failed to cool
The thirsty lip and fevered brow
From that still rippling pool
Wherein my feet have stood. My cup
In ready hands and strong
Has dipped its crystal waters up
So long, so long, so long!

But now my joints are worn and old,
My spout is parched and dry;
My cup's a-leak and will not hold
My drink, howe'er I try.
So root me up like some old tree
Bereft of leaf and shade,
And in some corner let me be
Irreverently laid.

The walls are composed of ...sandstones and shales, which ...off in huge masses under the ac...n of storms and frost, forming a se...ies of cliffs, alternating with ...slopes of debris, the whole being ...ersed by many embattled cliffs of ...sandstone. The evidence so far obtained suggests that some of the clans of the Moki tribe in Northern Arizona migrated to their present habitat from a place in the north, and that place is believed to be the Mesa Verde country. In other words, the Moki Indians may be regarded, in general terms, as the descendants of the people who built the houses in the cliffs of the Mancos.

The ruins found in the Mancos canon and adjacent gorges represent the highest attainments of the ancient cliff dwellers in the art of house building. Although many thousands of ruins have been found in the southwest none compares with those of the Mesa Verde in character of masonry or in general finish. In this respect the ruins along the Mancos and its tributaries are far superior to the villages now inhabited by the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico and Arizona.

Although discovered in 1874 and 1875 by explorers connected with the Geological Survey, under Professor F. V. Hayden, and reported upon at that time, the ruins are in such an inaccessible region that few white men visited them until quite recently. Within the past few years, however, several large collections of relics of various kinds have been taken from the old buildings, which were partly demolished in the process, and it was to put a stop to such vandalism that the Mesa Verde country was placed in charge of the Colorado Cliff Dwellings Association.

Seattle a Fur Centre.

The Seattle Fur Sales Agency has been organized, and articles of incorporation will be filed within a few days. As the name implies, the company is organized to handle furs of all kinds, and regular fur auctions, such as are held in London, are to be held here four times each year.

"The purpose," said J. S. Goldsmith, one of the trustees, "is to make Seattle the greatest fur centre in the country. We expect to get furs from all parts of the country, particularly the Northwest and Alaska. This agency will have the effect of bringing here fur trappers and salesmen from all sections of the United States, Canada and Alaska, and fur buyers from all parts of the world. We will deal both with the storekeepers in the remote regions where the animals are trapped, and with the trappers themselves. The company will commence business as soon as the details can be arranged. The office has not yet been secured, nor the site of the warehouse decided upon, but these matters will be attended to at once."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JULY 8.

Subject: The Duty of Forgiveness, Matt. xviii., 21-35—Golden Text, Matt. vi., 12—Memory Verses, 21, 22—Topic: Forgiving One Another—Commentary.

I. Christ's teaching concerning forgiveness (vs. 21, 22). 21. "Came Peter." Peter always made himself very prominent. His question was suggested by Christ's words concerning offenses against others (Matt. 18:6, 7). "How oft." Peter perceives that a law of tenderer dealing is to prevail in the church than exists in the synagogue. "And I forgive." He knew it was his duty to forgive, but the question was how often. "Till seven times." Peter uses the term seven in a strictly literal sense. The teaching of the rabbis was never to forgive more than three times. 22. "Until seventy times seven." It is doubtful whether the original means four hundred and ninety or seventy-seven (seventy times seven, or "seventy times and seven," as in margin of Revised Version). But in either case it is a symbolical expression for never-ending forgiveness.

II. Our duty illustrated and enforced (vs. 23-27). 23. "Kingdom of Heaven likened." The teachings of Christ with respect to forgiveness are fully illustrated in the parable which follows. It shows, 1. The character of man's relation to God. 2. The real meaning on man's part of a distinct refusal to forgive. "King." The king represents God. "Would make a reckoning." R. V. The picture is drawn from an Oriental court. The fundamental moral principle in God's kingdom is righteousness. The great King of Heaven and earth will, one day, reckon with all of His subjects. "Servants." Those to whom God has committed great trusts and opportunities.

24. "Ten thousand talents." An enormous sum. The amount cannot be reckoned definitely. It has been estimated all the way from nine to twenty millions of dollars. 25. "Had not to pay." Our debt to God is so great that we are utterly incapable of making Him any satisfaction whatever. "Commanded him to be sold." An allusion to the Law of Moses. See Exod. 22:3; Lev. 25:39, 47; 2 Kings 4:1. Creditors had power to sell insolvent debtors in several countries of Europe, as well as in Asia, in ancient times. We thus see by this parable what our sins deserve. Captives to sins are captives to wrath. "And payment to be made." The amount obtained would be wholly inadequate to cancel the debt, but as large a payment was to be made as possible.

26. "Will pay thee all." The debt is admitted and he comes pleading for mercy. The means which a sinner should use to be saved are, 1. Deep humiliation of heart. 2. Fervent prayer. 3. Confidence in the mercy of God. 4. A firm purpose to devote his soul and body to his Maker.

27. "Forgave him the debt." We are debts of our heavenly King. But, if we cast ourselves at His feet, He is ready in infinite compassion not only to release us from punishment, but to forgive us the debt.

III. The doom of the unforgiving (vs. 28-35). 28. "An hundred pence." About fifteen or sixteen dollars. About one millionth part of the debt this unmerciful servant had owed the king. "Took him by the throat." Thus manifesting a most unkind and base disposition. The sin is greatly aggravated when we consider his own debt, and the mercy shown him. What are my brother's sins against me compared to my numberless sins against God. "Pay me that thou owest." He was unwilling even to forgive him a single dollar. He must pay in full and pay at once. We must be very careful and not show this same disposition in our treatment of others. 29. "Fell down at his feet." His fellow-servant humbled himself and plead for mercy as he himself had done just before this.

30. "And he would not." Such a man; so harsh and hard against those who are in every way his equals. Ignorance of his own condition makes him unforgiving and cruel to others. 31. "Were very sorry." An act of this kind is so dishonorable to all true Christians, and to the spirit of the Gospel, that through the concern they felt for the prosperity of the cause of Christ they are obliged to speak against it. 32. "Thou wicked servant." Unmercifulness is great wickedness. To the unmerciful, God will have no mercy; this is an eternal purpose of the Lord which can never be changed. Jesus said, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matt. 6:15).

33. "Even as I had pity on thee." The servant is here shown the obligation he is under to his fellow-servant, because of the mercy that had been shown him. It is justly expected that those who have received mercy shall show mercy.

34. "Delivered him to the tormentors." The person who does not have a forgiving spirit will be tormented, both in this world and in the world to come. A guilty conscience, the fear of the judgment day and the fires of God's wrath (Rev. 20:15) will, in turn, act as tormenters. "All that was due." And inasmuch as the amount was so great that he could never pay it, he must have been delivered over to the tormenters forever. The wicked will be banished eternally from the presence of God.

35. "So likewise." This verse is an application of the whole parable. The parable is not intended to teach us that God reverses His pardons to any; but that He denies them to those who are not worthy of them. Those who have not forgiven others their trespasses have never yet truly repented, and that which is spoken of as having been taken away is only what they seemed to possess. Luke 8:18.

THE ORIGIN OF BASEBALL.

A. G. SPALDING, THE FAMOUS PITCHER TALKS OF THE GAME.

First Played in New York City in 1842 on the Site of the Madison Square Garden—Civil War was a Great Promoter of the Sport—Value of the Game as Exercise.

In his address presenting the Spalding trophy to Public School No. 46, winners of the public schools championship of 1905, A. G. Spalding, the great Chicago baseball pitcher of many years ago, said of the origin of the game:

"Baseball is of American origin, was born in New York City, and the first baseball ground was located about where Madison Square now stands. Back in 1842 a few of the young business men of New York began to assemble every Saturday afternoon on these grounds to play what they called baseball. In 1845 these same young men organized the original Knickerbocker Baseball Club of New York, the first baseball club ever organized. The club printed the first playing rules in 1845, and it may interest you to know that the present game of baseball could be played to-day under these same rules with a few minor changes, showing that the underlying principles of the game have not changed from that day to this. Five years later, in 1850, the Gotham and Empire Clubs of New York were organized, and then began rival match games between clubs. In 1857 a convention of baseball players was held in New York, which resulted in the formation of the first National Association of Amateur Baseball Players in 1858, with a total membership of about tweny-five clubs, all from New York City or the immediate vicinity. This national organization gave a great impetus to the game and clubs began forming in other cities.

"The game had become well launched when the civil war began in 1861. The New York baseball players of that period were among the first to respond to President Lincoln's call for troops, and they took their baseball accoutrements with them, and thus the game was introduced into the army, where it soon became a favorite camp pastime. Every regiment had its baseball team, and the monotony of camp life was very much relieved by match games of baseball. In some unaccountable manner the new game found its way over into the Confederate lines, and while those two magnificent armies could not agree upon national policies, they could agree upon baseball. At the close of the Civil War, in 1865, the soldiers of both armies in returning to their homes disseminated baseball throughout the nation, so you can see that baseball has its patriotic side, and became the national game of America through the efforts of those battle-scarred veterans of the Civil War. These returning veterans became the baseball instructors to the youths of that period, and I happened to be one of those youths that caught the baseball fever at that time. Baseball thus introduced throughout the country, became a furore, and nearly every city, town, and hamlet had its baseball club. The rivalry between cities became intense, and any young man with baseball skill was eagerly sought for by wealthy clubs.

"Every possible effort was made at this period to keep the game on a strictly amateur basis, but the demand of the public for a high degree of playing skill, together with the growing tendency to gamble on the result of the games, produced a sort of veiled professionalism which continued in vogue until 1871, when the first professional association of baseball players was organized, since which time the game has been governed by the professional element.

"I look upon baseball and kindred sports as one of the greatest educational factors of the times. We live in a strenuous age, and our American boys and youths should be educated and developed along lines that will enable them to meet and cope with these conditions. What can better fit a boy for the rough-and-tumble business life of to-day than a thorough schooling in athletics properly directed. As the mental faculties grow and develop, let the physical body grow along with it, in order to make a combination that will be useful, and in our crowded cities how is it possible to thus develop our city boys except through a systematic and properly directed training in athletic sports. An American boy takes to athletic sport and games like a duck to water, but this natural inborn love needs proper direction, and that is what I understand the Public Schools Athletic League has undertaken to do for the boys of Greater New York.

"Baseball not only develops the muscles and the whole physical body, but it is of still greater value in developing the mental faculties, for the ball player must be alert, must think quick and act with the thought, for there is no place on the team for the laggard. It is also a great training for the temper, for a boy soon learns that losing his temper is equivalent to losing the game. As a moral force nothing excels baseball, and athletic sports generally, for it is a healthy medium through which a boy's youthful vitality can work off naturally, and after a hard-fought game he has become so physically tired out that he has no inclination for anything except a good meal and go to bed."—New York Post.

COULDN'T FIND THE GOLD.

Robbers' Cave Did Not Give Up Its Wealth to a Dreamer.

Believing that a spot in which an immense fortune had been buried had been revealed to him in a dream, George Woods, a Clinton trapper, accompanied by C. L. Henry, also a trapper, has dynamited a cliff in the vicinity of Robbers' Cave in an attempt to find the treasure. Though the attempt was unsuccessful, it has revived stories of a generation ago to the effect that hundreds of thousands of dollars in gold and money had been secreted in the bluffs near the famous cave.

According to the tales which were prevalent two or three decades ago, the great fortune had been buried in the cliffs by a band of thieves which had infested that part of the country. It was said that after a raid the band would meet near Robbers' Cave and in the presence of every member the spoils would be buried in a predetermined spot. According to the tale the robbers managed to get a large fortune before they were apprehended.

Since the apprehension of the thieves an air of mystery has always hovered about the cave, which was appropriately named Robbers' Cave by the residents of the country. The great cavern has been the Mecca of many hundreds of people, all of them intent on discovering the hiding place of the robbers' loot. None of them has been successful, however, and finally the search was given up.

The cave itself bears well the air of mysticism which surrounds it. It opens from one of the bluffs overlooking Thousand Island, and is a picturesque spot. Every summer many thousands of people gaze into its great depth and wonder where the bottom really is. No one has been found who is brave enough to descend into it far enough to determine the exact depth. Some years ago an expedition was formed and went to the spot armed with long ropes. One of the members was tied on the end of a rope and cautiously let down into the mouth of the cavern. He went down several hundred feet, but found no bottom.

A number of other expeditions have since been formed, but no one has had the courage to explore the cave to its bottom. Rushing water can at times be heard in the cavern, and a current of fresh air constantly issues from its mouth. As no outlet has been found, it is believed by many that the cavern is really a great tunnel under the Mississippi River, with its outlet somewhere on the Illinois side. This explanation, it is believed, clears the mystery of its bottom, the current of fresh air and the sound of rushing water.—Clinton correspondence Chicago Record-Herald.

Our Lead Pencils.

Many a boy is made happy these days by a present of half a dozen pencils with his name printed thereon in gold letters. Perhaps the name "lead pencil" will last through all time and eternity. The original pencil was really made of lead and on the rough paper of the time made a clearly discernible mark. Germany led in its manufacture. Our earliest importations were much sought after, and none could be bought with other money than gold coin. A common "lead" pencil was almost worth its weight in gold, and a man who got a supply had to be well recommended. When a New York merchant advertised the arrival of a consignment of "lead pencils" the rush to buy was pell-mell.

American ingenuity, aided by German detail, brought this country quickly to the front in pencil manufacture. Our enormous forests of cedar and the discovery of graphite, with the introduction of marvelous machinery and all kinds of labor-saving devices, have brought the daily output up to 1,000,000 pencils a day. There are salesmen whose annual bookings amount to half a million dollars each. They give away hundreds of thousands of pencils to advertise their business. Some use pencils as personal cards, and if met in a casual way will surely have every pocket stuffed full.—New York Press.

Mining Ditch Eighty Miles Long.

Construction of the largest mining ditch ever built in Alaska is to be commenced this year and completed during the summer of 1907. A company composed of New York capitalists, known as the Candle Ditch Company, has been formed to carry out this project, and a party of engineers will arrive from New York within several weeks to take the first steamer for Nome and commence the surveys.

The ditch will be eighty-one miles in length, and will supply water to all of the Candle Creek territory under the seventh tier of benches on both sides of the stream for its entire length of sixteen miles when completed. The new company was organized during the last winter in New York by T. C. Noyes, Fred P. Meyer and C. E. Herron, all well known mining men of the Candle Creek country, and owners of many claims in the section to be supplied by the big ditch.

The construction includes the building of a tunnel 6,500 feet in length, through the divide between Candle and Eldorado Creeks, and the total cost of the construction of ditch and tunnel is estimated at between $750,000 and $1,000,000.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

HOME AGAIN.

Babe, be good to daddy,
Mother isn't here;
Babe, be good to daddy,
Lie still, that's a dear;
That's right, chew your thumb and coo,
Daddy's all alone with you,
If you yell what will he do?
Daddy's full of fear.

Babe, be good to daddy—
Yes, indeed, you can.
Have whate'er you long for,
Here's a painted fan
That your mother prizes high,
Here's your mother's beads, and, why!
Here's dad's watch! Now, bye-o bye,
Be a little man.

Babe, be good to daddy,
You're a lump of bliss!
Babe, be good to daddy—
What? You want a kiss?
Mother's upped and goned away
To the neighbor's—upsaday!—
Guess her mind's made up to stay,
Stay all day, you wis.

Babe be good to daddy—
Now I hear her call!
Babe, your mother's home again!
Hear her in the hall?
Swing her beads around with glee,
And her fan—Here! Let that be!
Give that watch back here to me.
Squalling? Well, then, squall!

Eight-Man Power Dinners.

Eight men, exclusive of the butler, are required to serve a dinner of twenty-four covers, one being allowed for every three diners. Another is stationed in the pantry to "run in" the courses. Absolute order and silence reign among these men, who perfectly understand the butler's cabalistic signs. Electric signals pass constantly between chef and butler. From the seating of guests until the ladies leave, not more than eighty-five minutes should elapse, for long dinners are now considered bad form.

Upon these occasions scarcely a member of the domestic corps escapes some special duty. The housemaids assist the pantry-maid. After each course twenty-four silver plates and countless small silver must be carefully cleansed, wiped very dry, and then polished with chamois before being put away. Nearly 200 pieces of engraved crystal ware must be washed and polished, and it is too costly and brittle to be hastily handled.—Everybody's Magazine.

Golden Grain of Corn.

Last year was a big corn year in Nebraska. On 6,472,487 acres the yield was 243,713,244 bushels, or an average of more than thirty-seven and a half bushels to the acre. But the average during the past ten years has been only about thirty bushels. Moreover, it is a reasonable hope that, with the proper attention to the single grain of corn, the crop of the State should, within another ten years, average sixty bushels to the acre. In other words, the State, through the young professors, reasonably hopes to increase the yearly prosperity of her people by something like $80,000,000 or $90,000,000. Such is the treasure that may germinate from a grain of corn in Nebraska alone.—World's Work.

EXCUSE US.

There are a number of letters, etc. as well as something we wanted to say about several things, which will have to go over to next week. You see, the glorious Fourth, coming in the middle of the week, has got us all mixed, and it will take us until next week to get untangled.

OUR REPRESENTATIVE.

Mr. M. A. Kilgore has decided not to make the race for Representative (see his letter). Mr. Kilgore shows his patriotism in every line of his letter, and in the light of his past record, speaks truly when he says he will be found fighting in the ranks for the nominee of our primary. Rev. J. H. Thomas also declines to run for the office this year in a very manly letter in this issue. In connection with the above named withdrawal and declination, and the very strong petition for Attorney J. Osmond Middleton that is printed herein, it does seem as if he cannot refuse to obey the practically unanimous call from all sections of our county to announce himself. The call is an honor to any man and shows such a oneness in sentiment as to assure his nomination and triumphant election. We understand that Mr. Middleton has been personally asked by a number of our people to stand for Representative, but has steadily declined to do so, on the plea of his comparatively recent adhesion to our party, and that it would give the mud-slingers of the opposition a chance to say that he joined us for an office. This appeal disposes of that clear and clean.; we want him to accept the office of Representative, and it TRULY shows that the office is seeking the man this time.

Come out, Mr. Middleton, and WE ALL will give you a majority that will open the eyes of the opposition clique.

A CALL FOR MIDDLETON.

We, the undersigned Populists and Republicans of Chilton county, after duly considering the various parties mentioned as suitable and qualified men to represent our county in the Legislature of our State, do hereby express our belief that J. Osmond Middleton will fill every requirement and meet all demands, and we therefore heartily and earnestly solicit him to make the race.

Editor Union:

My Dear Sir—Owing to the fact that I have accepted a position with the turpentine company near me, I am reluctantly compelled to withdraw from the race for representative. I hope that my friends will not think hard of me for so doing, but they all know that I did not go into the race of my own accord. I certainly appreciate anything that has been done for me, but my financial condition is such that I can't afford to miss this opportunity.

So I ask my friends to accept my withdrawal from the race, promising you that while I am out of the race I am still the same "Old Moses" and in the fight to a finish for the success of our ticket. Let every man vote his convictions in the primary and then stand by the nominees.

Success to The Union and the People's cause.

Very truly yours,
M. A. KILLGORE.

ENDORSES GOODGAME.

Cooper, Ala.

Please allow me space for a word or two in behalf of Frank Goodgame for the office which he seeks. I wish to say to the voters of Chilton county who don't know him as I do that he is not an ex-official of any type, save that of a United States deputy marshal, which only better qualifies him for the office of Sheriff. Furthermore, he has ever been an upholder of the rights of the common people, and by his untiring effort has done as much for their cause as any man of his ability in the county. This is a case in which the office seeks the man, as well as the man seeking the office. So let us honor Goodgame as well as ourselves by nominating him for sheriff in the primary, and of course you all know how it will go in the general election. BEAT 10 VOTER.

MOUNT PLEASANT UNION.

Brethren:

Local 329, F. E. & C. U. of A., met in regular session June 30, 1906, with a good attendance, but about two-thirds of our members were absent. We have some important business before us, and I will ask the members who did not attend the last two regular meetings to be sure and and come out on July 14, so we can finish something of importance to us all. Brethren, I want to beg some of you to attend more regularly. There are some of us that have never been back to the lodge since they were initiated. We are depending on you, so be sure and come to the next meeting. With best wishes for the success of our order, which seems assured, I am, yours fraternally,

G. H. MASSEY,
President Local 329.

PLEASANT GROVE.

Health of this community is good, though B. F. Rasberry's little boy, Crit, is very sick, but we all hope for his speedy recovery. Judge Honeycutt preached an able sermon at Mullins' [illegible] school house to an attentive congregation. Many of our people attended the Children's Day and singing at Mars Hill Sunday, and report a nice time. There will be singing at this place next Sunday, beginning at 2:30 p. m., and everybody is invited to attend and bring their books and take part in singing hymns of praise to the Creator of this beautiful world. Music is a grand thing. If we could tell as much about it as we feel when hearing it we might easily answer the question, "What is music?" Oh, music that bringest the receding waves of eternity nearer to the weary heart of man as he stands upon the shore and longs to cross over. Music is the love language of the soul. It utters what words cannot express. It comes from God. Hence it leads back to Him. Music is God's best gift to man, the only art of heaven given to earth, the only part of earth we take to heaven. In our humble judgment, we will never know the power, the dignity and the real meaning of music in the fullest extent this side of heaven. All praise, honor and thanks are due to the Great Founder of the divine art.

UNCLE NED.

COOPER'S.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space to say a few words, as I've not written anything in some time. I don't hear much talk about politics, for we've had such a wrestle with Gen. Green that we have not had time, but just wait a few days and we'll commence. Mr. Editor, the people of Chilton county have just about got the Democratic patches off of their clothes, and we don't want any more on. We've some few men in this county that say they will vote the Democratic ticket in the county and the Republican ticket in the State. Just here I want to say that I'm not half "demmy" and half Republican; I am a full Republican, warp and filling and hard woven, and I'm not mealy-mouthed about it either. I've been asked to vote the Democratic ticket in the county, but I would not vote for my brother if he was on that ticket, for I've had a full "bait" of "demmy" promises. Now, Mr. J. O. Middleton, come out and run for Representative, and we'll show them "who hit Billy Pat on the head wid a stick." I think some of our best Democrats will vote for you, and we will have a landslide in old Chilton. Yours for The Union and the Republican party,

J. S. JONES, JR.

CARD FROM REV. J. H. THOMAS.

To the Voters of Chilton County:

I have been requested by a number of our people to make the race for Representative in the Legislature this time. After a careful consideration of this matter I have decided not to enter the face for the following reasons:

First—I feel my inability to fill the place.

Second—I realize the need of a strong man to fill that position.

Third—I don't feel financially able to make this race.

Now, I am always willing to do anything that my people put on me to do that I can do. Friends, I want to thank you for the confidence that you have in me, and I appreciate your solicitations along the line of my candidacy, and I regret that I must decline. But, owing to my present surrounding circumstances, I will not be a candidate this time. But I want to assure you that I am yet standing right where I have always been—a Populist in the county and a Republican in national affairs, and when our people nominate our ticket I stand ready to do what I can for it. Now, let us be conservative, not have too many candidates. I hope and trust this campaign may be pleasant to all concerned, and I say to all the candidates—on both sides—when you are in the north end of Beat 3 you can get a warm lunch and a bed at my house, fixed by as good a woman as Chilton county has got, and that lunch and place to sleep is free. I am yours for the right,

JOSEPH H. THOMAS.

CARD FROM J. M. GRANT.

Verbena, Route 2, July 3, 1906.

Editor Union:

I take this method of saying to the Populist and Republican voters of Chilton county that, for reasons best known to myself, I will not be a candidate for Sheriff in the coming primary. I write this, so that my friends can govern themselves accordingly. But I want to say to my friends in the different parts of the county who have pledged me their loyal support should I become a candidate, and especially in Beats 5 and 10, who know me better than any one else, that you will always have a warm place in my heart. In conclusion, let me say to all the candidates that when you are down in th's part of the county come to my house and make yourselves at home. I shall treat you all alike, and whichever one of you gets the nomination I shall do as I have done since 1892—go into the fight to win, and by the help of Divine Providence and the Populist and Republican voters of Chilton county I expect to see a majority of from 300 to 500 rolled up for the People's ticket next November. J. M. GRANT.

BLUE DARTERS.

It seems to me that we can't get any games this season. We've challenged seven different teams, and we only got two games out of the seven, which we won. I don't know the reason that we can't get a game, for we are not so good, for the rest of the teams being afraid we will win. We have never had a fight in our ball playing, and we try to play fair with all. So now I'll say, if there is any team living within fifteen miles of our ground, which is eight miles south of Clanton, and will send J. J. Headley, Clanton, Route 2, a challenge, we will play you on any appointed day. A PLAYER.

PINEDALE BEATS CONCORD.

The game of ball between Pinedale and Concord last Saturday (June 30) was interesting. Score, 9 to 8 in favor of Pinedale. J. J. Headley pitched the last five innings for Pinedale and struck out ten men. Only two runs were made on him. No runs were made on either side until the second inning, when Headley went to bat, and on the first ball thrown he knocked a home run. We want to have another game with Concord soon and play the best three out of five, as we have already played three games. Best wishes to The Union.

PINEDALE PLAYER.

CEDAR GROVE.

Health of community is good, except Mrs. A. F. Mims, who has been sick for some time, but we all hope for her speedy recovery. We had a nice rain Sunday, which was much needed. The trustees and patrons of the Cross Roads school are called to meet at that school house next Saturday (July 7) at 2 p. m. to attend to the interests of the school. L. T. Vickers has resigned as vice-president of Cedar Grove local, F. E. & C. U. of A. and A. H. Collins was elected in his stead. Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Hayes visited Birmingham last week. J. W. Hayes and wife were Clanton visitors Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Collins visited the latter's parents Saturday and Sunday. We all are going to Thorsby on the 4th to have a good time. That letter of Hon. Chas. F. Toms, State Senator of North Carolina, in last week's Union was a sure enough good one and made fine reading. I'd like to see a letter in The Union from Cooper's. Success to The Union and its many readers.

Health of this community is very good at present. Miss Hattie Sears, daughter of J. W. Sears, has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. W. R. King at Mountain Creek, and reports a nice time. E. K. and T. G. C. Michelson, plaintiff, vs. A. L. Wambem, Defendant.

To A. L. Wambem, the defendant in the above stated cause: You reside at Saint Ansgar, Post Office, the county of Mitchell and State of Iowa, U. S. A.:

You will take notice that G. C. Michelson, plaintiff in said cause, sued out an attachment against your property, A. L. Wambem, on the 19th day of June, 1906, in said court, to enforce the collection of a debt due by you in the sum of $279.00 with interest thereon at 8 per centum per annum, as follows, to-wit:

THE COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

Elsewhere in the paper will be seen the announcement and program of the Chilton County Sunday School Convention, to be held in Clanton July 21 and 22. This is the one time in the year when the view of the work presented is county wide in scope and importance. Therefore it is eminently needful that the convention be composed of county wide representation. It has been said that the convention idea was born in the desire for and need of mutual helpfulness, and the idea has grown so largely that in the United States last year there were held 13,000 Sunday school conventions, attended by approximately two million and a half workers. It is earnestly desired that the Chilton county convention shall result in such good to the delegates and visitors that every school in the county may feel the hastening impulse of new life, which comes always from giving and receiving help. An ideal convention represents every part of the field. Therefore to give this meeting the greatest opportunity to achieve the good results hoped for every school in the county should be represented. Splendid work has been done by the Sunday schools in Chilton, and it will do us all good to hear about this and to plan for even greater things for the future. The convention will be held under most favorable circumstances. Clanton is convenient to a majority of the Sunday schools, and those who have shared its hospitality know that its "quality is not strained," and the convention is assured a cordial welcome. The Executive Committee has arranged a most interesting program, and the sessions will be pleasant and instructive. All things tend toward making this one of the most successful conventions we have had, and it is earnestly hoped that this promise will be abundantly realized.

M. C. G.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union:

I continue to see so many nice letters from so many different writers, and I think it ought to constrain others to write. People generally are up with their work, and some who did not plow very deep in the spring are wishing for rain. We are glad to see "C. W. L.'s" article in last issue. Yes, he did use to sing with old ...ars Hill, and we'd be glad to have him with us again. It don't seem as if the political storm has reached here yet, and I haven't heard much said, although I think F. J. Fitts will play a very good game around here. We all know Mr. Fitts well, and know that he has always stood loyal to OUR CAUSE. I'd like to say to "Farm Hand" that if we'd all do as he does his small room would do for a church. (Stay at home, of course.) Walking to church is just good exercise for us, and any man that would spit on his floor ought to have his head examined to find out what was lacking in his make-up. Mars Hill and Providence had a nice game of ball Saturday. Score, 17 to 8 in favor of Mars Hill. Our Children's Day was a grand success. The program was nicely rendered during the morning, and we had song service in the afternoon. There was a large attendance, plenty of dinner and to spare. Among the song leaders were E. J. Scott, of Ashby; Jas. Franklin, of Pleasant Grove; G. W. Gothard, of Mars Hill, and Chas. Glasscock and Cord. Northcutt, of Rocky Mount. Organists were the Misses Nettie Matthews, Cassie Northcutt, Lula Lowery and Levy Cofer. Among the many visitors we noticed J. D. Scott and his father, also F. J. Fitts, one of the candidates for Sheriff. Mrs. Mandlin was buried Saturday evening at Providence. She was about 80 years old. We mourn our loss. Success to The Union.

THE OLD MAN.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

We are all living and doing well. Our farmers are most done work and are preparing for a good time on the Fourth. Rev. Lowery preached, as usual, a good sermon Sunday to a large and attentive congregation. The singing in the afternoon was good, and quite a number of unusual visitors were present. Our school is progressing nicely under the able management of Miss Bessie Ellis. Will Culp, our professional organist, accompanied by Prof. Gore, of Thorsby, attended a singing in Shelby county Sunday and report a good service. Some of our young people are talking of going to Cane Creek next Saturday. Shoot off another double-barrel, "Just a Voter." It sure sounds good to me. With best wishes to The Union editor and his readers. JUST A SUBSCRIBER.

CHILDREN'S DAY.

At Cedar Grove Church on July 21, 1906, in Beat 9, a fine program of recitations and music will be rendered by the pupils. Sunday school workers, editor of The Union, Probate Judge and all good people are invited and will be made heartily welcome.

J. W. HAYS, Superintendent.

WATSON'S MAGAZINE.

The leading exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, edited by Hon. Thos. E. Watson, of Georgia, the Father of Rural Free Delivery; author of "The Story of France," "Life of Napoleon," "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," "Bethany" and other books. Mr. Watson was the People's party nominee for Vice-President in 1896, and for President in 1904. He is today heading a middle-class reform movement which is bound to sweep the country in a short time.

Watson's Magazine is not a Socialist publication. It does not stand for collective ownership of all the means of production. Mr. Watson believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas electric lights, water works, etc.; and he believes in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The middle class—the home owners, farmers, small business men and property owners—won Jefferson's victory in 1800; won Jackson's victory over Nick Biddle's money power in 1832; won Lincoln's victory in 1860. But each time after the flush of victory had died away they became careless of their rights and went to sleep. They have slept a good portion of the time since 1865, but—

Watson's Magazine is waking them up. Another great victory is in the air. Keep in touch with the movement.

Dear Sir—I want to thank you, your Secretary and Treasurer, A. P. Longshore, of the Shelby County Division, and T. A. Leathers, Division Agent of the same, for $829.00 received in full payment of my husband's policy. I not only think this is the best, safest and cheapest plan of insurance on the market today, but a plan appealing to the patriotism of every Southern man and woman to enlist their aid, influence, patronage and endorsement in fostering a home institution that protects the people at actual cost in lieu of supporting those that drain our lovely Southland of money that leaves it never to return, to enrich foreign corporations and build up foreign enterprises. It only cost my husband $7.15 to leave me the above amount.

"IT SAVED MY LIFE"

PRAISE FOR A FAMOUS MEDICINE

Mrs. Willadsen Tells How She Tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Just in Time.

Mrs. T. C. Willadsen, of Manning, Iowa, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I can truly say that you have saved my life, and I cannot express my gratitude to you in words.

"Before I wrote to you, telling you how I felt, I had doctored for over two years steady and spent lots of money on medicines besides, but it all failed to help me. My monthly periods had ceased and I suffered much pain, with fainting spells, headache, backache and bearing-down pains, and I was so weak I could hardly keep around. As a last resort I decided to write you and try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am so thankful that I did, for after following your instructions, which you sent me free of all charge, I became regular and in perfect health. Had it not been for you I would be in my grave to-day.

"I sincerely trust that this letter may lead every suffering woman in the country to write you for help as I did."

When women are troubled with irregular or painful periods, weakness, displacement or ulceration of an organ, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation, backache, flatulence, general debility, indigestion or nervous prostration, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles.

No other female medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. Refuse all substitutes.

For 25 years Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, has under her direction, and since her decease, been advising sick women free of charge. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Two languages have died out in modern Europe, according to Rev. W. S. Zyrma. In a recent paper to British archaeologists, he doubted whether anybody could fix the time or place when Prussian disappeared, for the death of a language may be a lingering and obscure one, but Cornish seems to have passed away in its English home in quite recent times. The last Cornish drama bears date of 1611. A considerable Cornish literature is preserved in manuscript and printed in works, and the language has left its impression in the names and places and families. A few words, including the numerals, are still used by the miners.

Acting, it is said, on the advice of no less a person than the Kaiser himself, the German government has undertaken the novel experiment of dispatching an expert with the divining rod to German South Africa to conduct a search for water. Herr von Uslar, the diviner selected, is also a county sheriff and enjoys considerable celebrity in Germany.

Chief Engineer Henry W. Fisher, of New York, has succeeded in making real diamonds in an arc furnace, gems that are larger than any of the artificial diamonds created by Moisson, at Paris. Fisher's furnace is formed by an electric arc in air between two carbon electrodes, similar to the arc light. In it a temperature of 4,500 degrees C. is reached.

A process for aging wines by electricity has been patented in Germany.

CLEVER DOCTOR

Cured a 20 Years' Trouble Without Any Medicine.

A wise Indiana physician cured 20 years' stomach disease without any medicine, as his patient tells:

"I had stomach trouble for 20 years, tried allopathic medicines, patent medicines and all the simple remedies suggested by my friends, but grew worse all the time.

"Finally a doctor who is the most prominent physician in this part of the State told me medicine would do me no good only irritating my stomach and making it worse—that I must look to diet and quit drinking coffee.

"I cried out in alarm, 'Quit drinking coffee!' why, 'What will I drink?'

"'Try Postum,' said the doctor; 'drink it and you will like it when it is made according to directions, with cream, for it is delicious and has none of the bad effects coffee has.'

"Well, that was two years ago, and I am still drinking Postum. My stomach is right again and I know Doctor hit the nail on the head when he decided coffee was the cause of all my trouble. I only wish I had quit it years ago and drank Postum in its place." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"Never too late to mend. Ten days' trial of Postum in place of coffee works wonders. There's a reason.

A 30,000 PEACH TREE FARM.

Oklahoma Abounds in Orchards—Fruit Growing is the Popular Industry.

Something over 30,000,000 fruit trees have been planted by the orchardists and farmers of Oklahoma, writes the Guthrie correspondent of the New York World.

The people themselves do not yet realize how many they have planted. As comparatively few of the trees bore until the past few years, every man had kept on planting, and as the fruit trees that were bearing were young and produced the minimum amount of fruit the planting was still kept up and is still being kept up. As two-thirds of these trees are now bearing, the crop this season will be something enormous.

In the towns every residence lot has from six to two dozen fruit trees upon it, some of the towns being veritable orchards.

During the past two years many large shipments of Oklahoma fruit were made to Northern markets, the Oklahoma Elberta peaches netting a dollar per bushel in any city in the United States. The most important shipment, made principally for advertising purposes, was a car of peaches two years ago to London, England. A crate each was included for King Edward and Joseph Choate, the American Ambassador.

Many farmers have put from forty to sixty acres out to fruit. Again there are farmers who have planted their entire homesteads of 160 acres to fruit trees and have bought out their neighbors in order to plant more trees. Two such men are Frank Householder, of Guthrie, and J. A. Taylor, of Wynnewood. The latter has a farm of 30,000 Elberta peach trees, the majority of which will bear this year for the first time.

The farm home of Frank Householder, just west of Guthrie, contains 200 acres, of which 140 acres are in orchard. He has 11,000 peach trees which will bear this year, which means estimated receipts from peaches alone of $12,000 to $15,000, at a total cost of gathering, packing and shipping of $2000. These 11,000 trees are thickly covered now with little peaches.

Householder never cultivates his pear trees, of which he has 700. While the rows of peach, apple and cherry trees are free from weeds and carefully tended, the pear orchard has the appearance of a young wilderness. Householder explains that in Oklahoma cultivated pear trees are susceptible to the disease known as fire-blight. As a result of no cultivation his pear trees are healthy in appearance and are yielding well.

It is Householder's belief that no orchard can be grown successfully without spraying. He has his pump and barrels, and with these he travels here and there over the farm, spraying the various trees. He sprays all the trees once before they leaf in the spring, in order to head off early pests, and again just after flowering, while the petals are dropping off, so as to rid the trees of the codling moth. The first spray, according to Householder's calculations, gets ninety per cent. of the codling, and the second finishes them.

The Knot Reminded Him.

Hiram Bobbs was absent-minded. He admitted that himself. Still, even he was occasionally surprised by his own faillings. One morning he reached his office unaccountably late. "Dear me," he thought, "where can I have been?"

The answer was not forthcoming. Hiram sat down at his desk and took out his pocket handkerchief. It was tied tightly in a knot.

"Now," he exclaimed, "what was that for? Oh, yes. Marthy told me to get my shoes soled." With an air of resignation to the whims of womanhood, he put on his hat, closed his desk, and went out to the "soled while you wait" cobbler's. He went in and sat down, took off his shoes and settled back in a chair to read his newspaper.

"What is it, Mr. Bobbs?" inquired the cobbler.

"What? Oh, er—er—er—why—oh, yes; I want my shoes soled."

"Pardon me, sir," said the cobbler, "but I finished soling them only half an hour ago. They can't be worn out yet, sir."—Youth's Companion.

New Source of Alcohol.

Consul Hunt, of Tamatave, says that a recent number of the Bulletin Economique (Madagascar) reports that practical experiments made for the manufacture of alcohol from the manioc root (Jutropha manihot) have given promising results. From a sample (quantity not stated) of absolutely dry manioc root was produced 95.5 per cent. of sugar. This large percentage, which varies according to the degree of aridity of the manioc, has naturally attracted the attention of distillers. In commercial experiments from 220 pounds of manioc root about 10 to 13 gallons of crude alcohol were produced. Consequently, by reason of its low price, several large Paris distillers have adopted the use of manioc in their distilleries. Manioc root is already used extensively by starch and glucose manufacturers and furnishes food for both man and beast; therefore, this new use of it for manufacturing alcohol bids fair to place it in the front rank of colonial products."

A whaling station and factory has been established on Barkley Sound, less than 100 miles from Victoria, writes Consul Smith. There is an abundance of whales on the coast, and already a number have been caught and utilized at the new factory.

Rice Crop of Burma.

The area under rice cultivation in Burma on February 13 was reported at 6,600,621 acres. The surplus for export is now estimated at 220,000 tons of cargo rice, equivalent to 36,017,000 hundred-weight of cleaned rice.

Signed His Name 100,000 Times.

James B. Reynolds, of Boston, has been assistant secretary of the United States treasury for fifteen months and in that time has signed his name somewhere close to 100,000 times. His signature is of a fanciful character and consequently he uses ink by the gallon. As a rule he uses up three fountain pens a day. During a hot spell of weather at one time 12,000 Indian warrants came in. They had to be signed. The other assistant secretaries were on their vacations and "Jimmie" signed them, the whole 12,000. He lost twenty-one pounds and soured his disposition.

CHILD'S AWFUL SKIN HUMOR.

Screamed With Pain—Suffering Nearly Broke Parent's Heart—Speedily Cured by Cuticura.

"I wish to inform you that the Cuticura Remedies have put a stop to twelve years of misery I passed with my son. As an infant I noticed on his body a red spot, and treated same with different remedies for about five years, but when the spot began to get larger I put him under the care of doctors. Under their treatment the disease spread to four different parts of his body. The longer the doctors treated him the worse it grew. During the day it would get rough and form like scales. At night it would be cracked, inflamed and badly swollen, with terrible burning and itching. When I think of his suffering it nearly breaks my heart. His screams could be heard down stairs. The suffering of my son made me full of misery. I had no ambition to work, to eat, nor could I sleep. One doctor told me that my son's eczema was incurable, and gave it up for a bad job. One evening I saw an article in the paper about the wonderful Cuticura and decided to give it a trial. I tell you the Cuticura Oint'ment is worth its weight in gold, and when I had used the first box of Ointment there was a great improvement, and by the time I had used the second set of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent my child was cured. He is now twelve years old, and his skin is as fine and smooth as silk. Michael Steinman, 7 Sumner Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., April 16, 1905."

The colors of vegetation are intensified by strong sunlight and a certain degree of coolness, as we see in the redness of northern apples and the deep tints of Alpine plants and other conditions—such as the composition of the soil—have an influence. A recent attempt to color flowers artificially by chemicals added to the soil has been recorded by Henry Kraemner. Aluminum sulphate and potassium sulphate deepened the color of yellow roses and tended to streak the petals of the white carnation with red and ammonium sulphate, aluminum sulphate, iron citrate and citric acid brought out white streaks on scarlet carnations. The effects were too slight, however, to promise commercial importance.

YOUNG SUMMER.

BY MARIA K. LANE.

At hide-and-seek
Among the maple trees,
The sun in varied mood
Plays through the leaves.

Wide pastures bare,
With lichen-covered rocks;
Above, the mackerel clouds,
In little flocks.

A far cascade,
A bridal veil of white,
Greets with its murmurings
The coming night.

Cupid and the Six-Shooter

BY DR. R. E. HILL.

I ADMIT that the six-shooter, in its [illegible] was much oftener [illegible] offense than of de[illegible] largely the cause [illegible] bloodshed; and the [illegible] knowledge that he was an ex[illegible] cost many a man to [illegible] otherwise he would not [illegible] But, like every other [illegible] mixed one, and [illegible] favorably with blood[illegible] A six-shooter figured [illegible] of the prettiest [illegible] I ever knew of, and [illegible] spoiled either. But the [illegible] a great extent [illegible] those days, and [illegible] the memories of the [illegible] are left and who—"

"Let us have the episode in [illegible] deadly revolving machine [illegible]

A group of men, several "forty-[illegible] among them, were gathered in [illegible] of a Los Angeles hotel ro[illegible] talking of their former experi[illegible] in the gold fields, and comparing [illegible] and the methods of that lurid [illegible]—the days of the pick, shovel, [illegible] pan and revolver—with pres[illegible] mining methods, machinery [illegible]

"It was more than an episode, gen[illegible] it was an event, in the lives [illegible] of those concerned," said the [illegible] speaker. For Steve Daniels, [illegible] of the six-shooter, it was per[illegible] only an episode. Later, he—but [illegible] another story.

"In 1860 I was working a claim at [illegible] a Nevada County, and doing [illegible] well. More than a year had [illegible] since pay dirt was struck, and [illegible] were some 800 or 1000 people in [illegible] and saloons, of course, in [illegible] The 'Golden Eagle' was [illegible] of the most popular of these, and [illegible] Daniels was the bright particular [illegible] among its frequenters. It was [illegible] that he had formerly been a [illegible] and an unusually quiet, [illegible] member of the unquiet [illegible] until after the death of his [illegible]

He soon after came to the dig[illegible] bringing with him his little boy, [illegible] three years old, and Manuel, a [illegible] man, whose special business it was [illegible] after the child, though he in[illegible] acted as cook also.

"Daniels, who was one of the early [illegible] at Monte, staked a claim and [illegible] closely to business for some [illegible] that is until his first gun-play. [illegible] sober he was an easy-going, low-[illegible] fellow, just the kind a bully [illegible] select to impose on, and this [illegible] that class was deceived into [illegible] not long after the rush to Mon[illegible]

"He was buried next day, and [illegible] reputation as a remarkably [illegible] and accurate shot was duly es[illegible]shed. He fired three times and [illegible] could find but one hole through [illegible] man's body, and that not much [illegible] than the opening usually made [illegible] ball from a regulation six-[illegible] the bullets having scarcely [illegible] a hair.

"After that Daniels got on sprees [illegible] deadly and while they lasted he [illegible] turned loose for the fun there was [illegible] He did not fear God nor regard [illegible] when drinking, but drunk or sober [illegible] cared his child with every throb [illegible] heart. And 'Nugeto,' for that [illegible] the name given him by Manuel, [illegible] one of his golden curls, was as [illegible] pretty, handsome and cute a little [illegible] as one would wish to see. As [illegible] of said sweater he was about the [illegible] and most accomplished—within [illegible] limits of his vocabulary—that I [illegible] heard. He was given many a [illegible] sack of gold dust by those reckless [illegible] miners in exchange for 'cuss words,' [illegible] and no doubt lengthened his pile [illegible] greased.

"Manuel seemed really fond of the [illegible] and no one could have taken [illegible] better care of him; that is, while he [illegible] on duty. But the Mexican was [illegible] his employer in one respect, he [illegible] could go on jamborees. On these [illegible] occasions he always disappeared, how[illegible]ver and was usually gone several [illegible] days. Daniels accepted these little [illegible] affections as a matter of course, never [illegible] uttered a drop while Manuel was [illegible] present but attended strictly to the boy [illegible] and the claim. By the time the Mexi[illegible] returned Daniels had dust enough [illegible] hand to enable him to act the part [illegible] master of ceremonies at the Golden [illegible] Eagle with satisfaction to himself and [illegible] friends. He was having his fling [illegible] night, soon after Manuel's return, [illegible] when some one remarked that a tender[illegible]foot had come in on the afternoon [illegible] stage.

"'Trot him out, then,' ordered Steve. [illegible] some of you fellows go and get him [illegible] and I'll furnish the fun.'

"Two of them went out, and returned in a few minutes with a slender, city-bred looking young man, apparently about twenty-five or twenty-six years old.

"'There's the man that wanted to see you,' one of them said, pointing to Daniels.

"'What can I do for you?' asked the stranger, pleasantly.

"'We're feelin' sorter dull an' want you to entertain us some,' drawled Daniels. 'Our entertainments gen'rally begin by settin' them up to the crowd. Got no conscientious scruples, have you?' winking at the others. 'Never promised your mother on her d'yin' bed that you'd die before you took a drink, or anything of that sort, did you?'

"'Never,' answered the tenderfoot, 'and as I came here expecting to locate, and wish to get acquainted, I know of no quicker way. Barkeeper, drinks for the crowd, please.'

"So frank and pleasant was he, in words and manner that Daniels was slightly taken aback for the moment; but the drinks were swallowed with a will.

"'The next thing on the programme,' said Daniels as the last glass was returned to the bar, 'is the light fantastic. Not a member of the church, are you?' with another wink.

"'I am,' he replied; 'but my church is not one of those that prohibits dancing occasionally. The Scriptures tell us there is a time for all things, and I suppose this is my time to dance. I am a very ordinary performer, but will do what I can.'

"Throwing off his hat and coat he began a light, graceful heel-and-toe dance. This he kept up for several minutes and then stopped.

"'Here, what do you mean by quittin' so soon?' growled Daniels. 'I didn't give you the word to stop!'

"'Why, I'm tired,' was the answer.

"'Tired!' roared Daniels, whipping out his gun. 'There's no such word as tired in our dictionary; leastways, for you! When we're tired we'll say so. Till then, you move them tender feet of yours, and move 'em lively! Look out, now!'

"He fired as he spoke, and the bullet cut half its thickness through the edge of his victim's shoe-sole.

"For a moment an expression of startled surprise flashed into the young man's eyes.

"'If I must, I must,' he then said quietly, and began to dance again.

"'Faster! Faster!' ordered Daniels, emphasizing his commands with shots from his gun, and it seemed miraculous that he could shoot so close to those moving feet and not hit them.

"He had fired the last shot in one revolver and was drawing the other, when a small golden-haired figure, dressed in miniature miner's costume—red flannel shirt, rough trousers, stuck in boots and held up by suspenders—stood in the doorway, looked about the room, and seeing Daniels ran up to him, clasped his legs, and cried:

"'Take me, daddy! Me so hot an' tired an' sleepy! So veby sleepy, daddy!'

"Catching Nugeto to his breast Daniels asked: 'How did you get here? Where's Manuel?'

"'He's gone! Me cummed all the way by myself. Me not 'fraid!'

"'Well, I'll be——' Daniels paused suddenly, and, searching the boy's face with anxious solicitude, asked: 'What ails you, anyhow? Your face is all breakin' out!'

"'I will tell you what ails him,' said the stranger, after looking closely at the child; 'he has smallpox.'

"'Smallpox!' roared the crowd as one man, and they fell over each other getting out.

"'How do you know he's got it? Who're you, anyhow?' demanded Daniels, threateningly.

"'I'm a physician, come here to practice my profession, and I tell you positively the child has smallpox. Are there any cases in the camp?'

"'Haven't heard of one.'

"'I heard some rumor of the disease as I came up from 'Frisco. Has no one in camp been down that way recently, and returned?'

"'My Mexican cook has just——' Daniels paused suddenly and relieved himself of a good long paragraph of oaths. 'That's it,' he said, with conviction; 'that greaser caught it somewhere and brought it back with 'im. I noticed his face was mighty red the day after he got back, but thought it was the drink. So he's give you the smallpox, my Nugeto, an' then run away to keep me from borin' his yeller carcass full o' holes! But I'll find 'im an' kill 'im 'fore the smallpox has a chance to—wnether you live—or—die. But, doctor,' his voice breaking, 'you can save him, can't you? You won't let him die?'

"'I will certainly do my best; and, with your help, I hope the chances are good to pull him through.'

"'And they pulled him through, but it was a very close call. The doctor took his patient to a vacant shack about a mile from camp, and there he and Steve nursed him day and night till he was well. The doctor—Collet was his name, he said—took such good precautions that the disease didn't spread, and he and Daniels both escaped it.

"When Nugeto was back in camp again nothing was too good for him or the doctor. What with gunshot wounds, cuts and bruises and ordinary sickness, Collet was kept pretty busy. He was always pleasant, but very quiet; so much so that I told the boys I believed he was troubled in his heart about something. And so it turned out.

"Nearly a year after Collet's introduction that night to the hangers-on in the Golden Eagle, Daniels was initiating another tenderfoot. This one was smaller even than Collet; so small and delicate looking, in fact, that the little black mustache he wore seemed out of place. He was plainly in a fearful funk, so scared he couldn't talk, and didn't know how to order drinks. He only pretended to drink himself, and sat his glass down full. When Daniels brought his fist down on the bar and roared, 'Drink every drop of it and be quick about it!' he made a desperate effort, but came near strangling, and the glass fell and broke. His knees were visibly shaking when the order came to dance, and when Steve followed his command with a shot close to the visitor's feet, there was a scream—a woman's piercing, terrified scream—and she fell back in a dead faint, the false mustache breaking loose as she struck the floor.

"Among those who rushed in at the sound was Dr. Collet. As he bent over the small, white faced figure he uttered an exclamation, and apparently forgetting there was anybody else in the room, began pleading with her.

"'Edith, darling, look at me! Speak to me,' he said.

"'Boys, I think we've got business on the outside just at this stage of the game,' said Daniels, and we all went out.

"Mike Brannon, the barkeeper, told me afterward that she was not long in coming to, and that then two soft, white arms went round Collet's neck and a mighty sweet voice said: 'Oh! Arthur, how could you, why did you go off in that awful way, trying to make us all believe you were drowned? I didn't know what to think. Why did you, Arthur?'

"'Because,' he replied, 'I thought you had fallen in love with Leonard Wells. He was just the kind of man (except his poverty) that most women fancy—handsome, brilliant, full of audacity and of manly proportions—everything, in fact, that I was not. I overheard him say you had given him good reason to believe you were in love with him, and that he would marry you if I was out of the way, and you had the entire fortune. From what I had seen of your manner toward him on more than one occasion I believed he spoke the truth, and, as I wished you to be happy I made away with myself, or tried to leave that impression. Then I came to this out-of-the-way corner of the world, changed my name and have been practicing my profession. I thought I was as good as buried alive. How did you find me?'

"'I did not, but detectives found you for me. But I had told you I loved you. Why could you not believe me?'

"'You had not met Wells then. Did you marry him after you thought I was drowned?'

"'I did not think you were drowned. My heart told me you were not. But I would not have married Mr. Wells if you had been, not if he had been the last man on earth! I have loved you from the first, as I told you. Do you believe it now, or must I go back without you?'

"'Yes, sweetheart,' he said. 'I do believe it, and I hope you will forgive me for doubting you. But tell me how——'

"'Not in this horrible place, Arthur. Take me away, quick, and I will tell you all about it when I take off this coat and—these other things.'

"Mike told me he cleared his throat several times to let them know he was there, but he might as well have been back in Ireland for all the attention they paid him.

"We heard afterwards that not a great while before Kendrick (for that proved to be the doctor's real name) came to Monito, a wealthy uncle in San Francisco died, leaving a fortune to him and the daughter of an old friend, jointly, on condition that they married. If either should fail to carry out his wishes he or she was to be cut off without even the proverbial shilling and the entire estate was to go to the other. The rest you have heard."

"I suppose everything came out all right?" ventured a listener.

"Of course. They are still living, and have one of the handsomest homes in 'Frisco. And they did a good part by Nugeto, too. When Steve Daniels finally struck the wrong tenderfoot and was killed, Kendrick and his wife took the boy, brought him up, and he is now a prominent business man of 'Frisco."

Hebrew in Jerusalem.

Yiddish is an archaic and corrupt form of German extensively spoken by Jews in many countries besides Germany itself. An instance of its popularity is given by a writer. In Jerusalem he met "a worthy man who denounced me for being unable to converse with him in Yiddish. 'You are no Jew,' he protested, 'for you do not know the Jewish language.' I answered that Hebrew was the Jewish language and that I was quite willing to speak to him in it. His rejoinder was: 'I have no patience with this new fangled idea of speaking Hebrew in Jerusalem.'"

New York City's gross debt is $618,796,337, and the net debt $447,882,089. The year's increase was $42,000,000.

Problem of the Ambitious Woman

By Mrs. Gertrude Atherton.

IT would be an extravagance, of course, to lay the heartless methods employed in the rapid accumulation of wealth to any one cause, particularly to hold responsible a society that probably does less thinking than any society has done since the world began. Men are not all as women make them, and the modern lust for enormous wealth with the power over other men that it brings, the delight in the chase, in risk, in trampling human obstacles out of existence, are merely a modern development of primal instincts. Life has changed with the ages, but man very little. Those engaged in the fight for wealth today might almost be called a reversion to their savage ancestors, and it is a remarkable fact that in their hours of relaxation, when the hideous din of the battle must be forgotten if they would live to fight another, they are far more brutal in their excesses than any man of leisure would dream of being.

Nevertheless, their respectable wives, if they have not been the first to suggest that the gold of their neighbors be diverted into their own coffers, are not long whetting the appetite. Women who are obliged to do their own work, dream, if they dream at all, of little beyond a future competence, but the moment they find themselves in comparative affluence, with servants to do all but their thinking, their ambition and rapacity know no bounds. The records of other millionaires begin to interest them, and, above all, personal details of the millionaires' wives, who, once obscure as themselves, are now of dazzling prominence, with pictures in the cheap magazines and every movement recorded by the press. Perhaps, however, the most dissatisfied women in our vast commonwealth, are those who, without children, or with one or two that are old enough to be at school, live in flats or boarding houses on an income too small to permit them to take any position in society, and large enough to keep them in idleness. These women read the society papers, envy bitterly those who are no better educated or better born than themselves, and when their husbands are weak, nag them into small dishonesties and long terms of social retirement. It is in this class that the largest number of actual drunkards are to be found, and that from which the greatest number of women "fall." There should be a social crusade for their benefit, for although the multiplication of woman's clubs has in part solved the problem, there are still thousands that have absolutely no object in life beyond their petty personal interests.—Cosmopolitan.

Saccharin.

By Prof. I. E. Ladd, Food Commissioner of North Dakota.

INVESTIGATIONS made within the past year in the University of Chicago prove that the use of saccharin produces headache and malaise, and speaking further here is what they say: "The use of saccharin, or rather the misuses, are as varied as its name. It is extensively used as a sweetening agent in jams, jellies, syrups, "maple sugars," chewing gums, confections, etc. Dentists use it for mouth washes, and as such we see no objection.

The disgust which the prolonged use of sweet rolls and other fancy bakers' bread frequently occasions is unquestionably due in a large measure to the saccharin contents. The prolonged use of salicylic or benzoic acid produces well marked effects. The very close chemical relation of saccharin to these acids is in itself sufficient to arouse the suspicion that it also would be deleterious if its use were continued. Almost the whole series of benzol compounds are classed by pharmacologists as general protoplasmic poisons. Like these compounds, saccharin has an antiseptic action—it prevents or retards the growth of bacteria and most of the digestive enzymes. Digestion is impaired by its presence in food.

Physicians have believed that while saccharin possesses no medical value it would render food more palatable when sugar is contraindicated. However, such has been the history of many other drugs used in medicine. Tartar emetic and antimony compounds were formerly believed to be almost a panacea, and were lauded by eminent medical men of time; we know that antimony has little or any value except as an emetic. The great weight of pharmacological evidence is entirely unfavorable to the use of saccharin in medicine, and it is only persistent, skillful and unscrupulous advertising that keeps it before the public. Manufacturers easily find failures in the overcrowded medicinal physicians who are willing to use their degree as a commercial product. The unsuspecting public is easily led and sick men will flock to any quack who promises relief or comfort. Just as morphine insidiously relieves pain only to create a greater one, so saccharin may please the palate to destroy the more vital centers. Our work with it corroborates the results of the most eminent European pharmacologists, and we fully believe that it is a drug whose action is toward dyspepsia.

On Having the Stuff in You.

By Martha Baker Dunn.

THAT phrase—"the stuff in him"—has an especial and abiding significance for me, on account of a bygone tale which I am not going to be too modest to mention. Once upon a time, a sufficient number of years ago, I chanced to spend a week at an island camp owned by a wooden-faced old general who had led a desperate but successful charge during the Civil War. He was the sort of general to whom desperate charges might naturally be intrusted, because he belonged to the species of human catapult that, once launched, becomes incapable of deflection.

In these piping times an angelic meekness, we are all hurrahing for an eternal peace; but in that bygone day of which I write, a few bloody-minded persons still survived whose pulses could be stirred by the thought of those mistaken but well-meaning heroes of the past,—

who, deadly hurt, agen
Flashed on afore the charge's thunder,
Tippin' with fire the bolt of men
Thet rived the Rebel line asunder.

That old general's gimlet-eyed but unrevealing gaze pierced all the joints of my armor, and penetrated my soul with a sense of my many deficiencies; but on the last day of my stay, as the ancient warrior and myself, alone on the sad sea sand, were presiding over a mighty kettle of clams, he surprised me with a hollow whisper which filled my heart with joy, and made me feel that I had been brevetted on the field of battle. "You've got the stuff in you!"—that was what the Valiant One pronounced, and many a time thereafter on the ceaseless battlefield of life the stuff in me would have been much poorer stuff than it proved, had I not remembered the obligation which bound me to live up to that old general's accolade.—Atlantic Monthly.

The Schools Train Home-makers

By Elizabeth Howard Westwood.

TIME was when home makers was the serious interest of life, when children engaged in the industrial occupations because they were necessary. Boys chopped wood, carried water, took care of fires, and wielded saw and hammer. Girls spun thread, wove cloth, made garments, cooked every mouthful of food eaten by a large family, washed the dishes, and cared for the house to the remotest detail. Our educators are now rescuing for the child the birthright which industrial and economic progress are snatching from him. It is not only as a matter of information that the boy learns to carve wood and ual training, the home-making, taught in the public schools has a subtler and the girl to set tables, valuable assets as such information must be, but the man- more fundamental significance. It teaches the muscles to respond to thought. It trains the will to act and to refrain from acting. It exercises neglected areas of the brain. In fact it gives to the boy and girl the same development which was responsible for the magnificent men and women who were the product of the farms a generation ago.—Good Housekeeping.

Contracted Quarters.

The sort of conversation in which Martha Hackett often indulged was peculiarly trying to her cousin, Mrs. Lane.

"Martha's been here all the morning," said Mrs. Lane, wearily, at dinner one night. "She talked on and on about things that didn't amount to anything, and were all disconnected. I endured it as well as I could, but it does seem sometimes as if she was wandering in her mind."

"Dell, there's one thing," said Mr. Lane, grimly, "you needn't ever worry about her going far if that's where's she's wandering."

About 200 oysters would be required daily to supply sufficient nourishment for one person.

BRICK FLOOR IN DINING ROOM.

A red brick floor is especially suitable for the dining room of a colonial summer home, the effect being cool, and most inviting by way of contrast with the snowy linen and gleaming silver of the table appointments.

A NEW USE FOR PAPER.

A new use for paper in which women are likely to be interested has been discovered in the adaptation of tissue paper for rugs which are intended especially for summer use and look something like a fine grade of matting. The patterns, however, are more intricate than usual in matting. The rugs, which may be bent or folded as desired, are woven much like any other kind of rug. They are not as heavy as Smyrna floor coverings and are thicker than matting.

TO REMOVE PAINT FROM STEPS.

So often when the house is being done up paint is spilt over the steps, and it is sometimes difficult to get rid of it. In this case, make a strong solution of potash, and wash the steps thoroughly with this, simply leaving it to soak off. After a little the paint will become quite soft, and can be washed off with soap and water; then thoroughly wash with cold water. Paint which has been on for any length of time will yield to this treatment.

BREAKFAST NOTES.

Peaches, like large plums, pears and apples, are cut in small sections and eaten from the fingers. Bananas should be cut in two, peeled and eaten with a fork.

An orange may be cut, unpeeled into small sections, the seeds removed the skin pushed back at the corners and then bits transferred with the fingers to the lips. An orange may also be cut in halves and the juice taken out with a spoon. Chicken, game or chop bones should under no circumstances be taken up in the fingers.

At a large and formal dinner, luncheon or breakfast, a guest should never ask for a second helping to any of the dishes. At a small dinner or a family dinner the hostess may invite her guests to take a second helping, or she may direct the servant to again pass the dish to every one at the table. In the same way the host, who carves, may offer a little more meat to those who have disposed of their first helping.

To eat slowly and quietly, taking small mouthfuls and allowing time for conversation, is indeed a sign of good breeding and should be taught every child, even in the nursery, so that when he or she grows up it may have become a habit. Nothing is more disgusting than to see a person talking with his mouth full or to hear him smack his lips as he eats or gurgle as he takes his soup.

Never, never use a toothpick except in the privacy of your bedroom, and use dental floss instead whenever possible. Do not think of taking a toothpick out of a stand in a restaurant or hotel.

RECIPES.

Meat Croquettes.—Cold meat of any kind, fat and lean together, chop fine. Add one-half as much cracker rolled with salt and pepper, one teaspoonful of made mustard and a piece of butter; knead all together and make into little balls, and dip into the beaten yoke of an egg, then in cracker crumbs, and fry a light brown; serve hot.

Cheese Biscuits.—Spread a layer of puff paste with some grated cheese, and dust with a little salt and a dash of cayenne; double up the paste, roll out rather thin, and cut it with a small round pastry cutter. Glaze with the white of an egg, lay them on a floured tin and bake in quick oven to a pale straw color.

Pineapple Filling for Shortcake.—Peel, remove the eyes, then shred or cut in tiny cubes a rich, ripe sugar-loaf pineapple. Cover with sugar to sweeten and leave overnight. When the shortcake is ready to serve fill with the pineapple dice drained from the syrup and use the latter with whipped cream for a sauce to pour over the shortcake.

Fruit Popovers.—To one cupful of flour add gradually one cupful of milk, and when the batter has been stirred perfectly smooth add two well-beaten eggs; beat the mixture with an egg beater; then add one teaspoonful of butter, a saltspoonful of salt, and bake in hot buttered gem pans. When done, split and fill with chopped fruit or jam.

White Mountain Pudding.—Add to one pint of milk a cupful of sugar, half a cupful of fine cracker crumbs, the beaten whites of two eggs, a few grains of salt, half a teaspoonful of almond extract, and two heaping tablespoonfuls of cocoanut. Bake slowly until firm like custard; beat the whites of two eggs with a half a cupful of sugar and spread over the top, then brown lightly in the oven.

Strawberry Croquettes.—Cook one cupful of farina in three cupfuls of milk until soft. Then add one-half cupful of sugar, a pinch of salt, and flavoring to taste. Stir in two well beaten eggs, and cook over the fire a minute or two longer. Turn out to cool and form into croquettes, placing two or three fine strawberries in the centre of each. Dip in beaten egg and dry bread crumbs, and fry in deep, hot fat to a golden brown. Serve hot with strawberry butter.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Be sure and register when the registrars are in your beat, as the only excuse for not doing so is by reason of sickness of yourself or in your family or by absence from the county. Everybody can register this summer who will be qualified by residence or age by the 8th day of November. Poll tax paying has nothing to do with registration; you can register now and pay your poll tax afterwards, but you cannot vote unless you are both registered and have paid your poll tax (if any is due). The period of residence necessary to register is two years in the State, one year in the county and three months in the beat. If you have moved from one beat to another in the county less than three months before election day, you can vote in your old beat, so you don't lose your vote by changing beats. Any one who desires to register on property qualification should take with him his last assessment sheet and tax collector's receipt to show to the registrars as proof that you are possessed of such property and pay taxes on it. You can register under ANY of the following heads:

1. If you own forty acres or more land in this State, and reside upon it.
2. If your wife owns forty acres or more land in this State, upon which you reside.
3. If you own real estate in this State that is assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
4. If your wife owns real estate in this State assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
5. If you own personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
6. If your wife owns personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
7. If you can read and write any section of the constitution of the United States.

Don't give up your life certificate that you got in 1902; you only have to show it to the registrars in case you have moved to this county from some other county.

THE UNION will furnish any one information on any special points that they may be in doubt upon, and stands ready to help any one to get all the rights he is entitled to under the laws of Alabama. If you think you are entitled to register and the registrars should refuse you, take a couple of good men with you so you can have witnesses as to such refusal and the reasons given by the registrars, and thereby be enabled to take your case upto high authority. tf

On Having the Stuff in Y

By Martha Baker Dunn.

THAT phrase—"the stuff in him"—has an especial and significance for me, on account of a bygone tale which I ing to be too modest to mention. Once upon a t ent number of years ago, I chanced to spend a week camp owned by a wooden-faced old general who perate but successful charge during the Civil War sort of general to whom desperate charges might intrusted, because he belonged to the species of human launched, becomes incapable of deflection.

In these piping times an angelic meekness, we are all eternal peace; but in that bygone day of which I write, a few persons still survived whose pulses could be stirred by the thought mistaken but well-meaning heroes of the past,—

who, deadly hurt, again
Flashed on afore the charge's thunder,
Tippin' with fire the bolt of men
Thet rived the Rebel line asunder.

That old general's gimlet-eyed but unrevealing gaze pierced of my armor, and penetrated my soul with a sense of my many but on the last day of my stay, as the ancient warrior and myself the sad sea sand, were presiding over a mighty kettle of clams me with a hollow whisper which filled my heart with joy, and that I had been brevetted on the field of battle. "You've got the —that was what the Valiant One pronounced, and many a time the ceaseless battlefield of life the stuff in me would have been stuff than it proved, had I not remembered the obligation which live up to that old general's accolade.—Atlantic Monthly.

The Schools Train Home-ma

By Elizabeth Howard Westwood.

TIME was when home makers was the serious interest children engaged in the industrial occupations because necessary. Boys chopped wood, carried water, tended and wielded saw and hammer. Girls spun thread, made garments, cooked every mouthful of food eaten family, washed the dishes, and cared for the home motest detail. Our educators are now rescuing the birthright which industrial and economic progress are snatching It is not only as a matter of information that the boy learns ual training, the home-making, taught in the public schools has the girl to set tables, valuable assets as such information must be more fundamental significance. It teaches the muscles to respond It trains the will to act and to refrain from acting. It exercises areas of the brain. In fact it gives to the boy and girl the same which was responsible for the magnificent men and women who duct of the farms a generation ago.—Good Housekeeping.

The Escape of Dix.

Birmingham, Ala.—The talk in Birmingham is the sensational escape of Robert L. Dix, the negro sign painter, who stabbed Bert Pesnell, a motorman, to death on an electric car in this city in October last, and who was sentenced to be hanged August 3. The reward offered by Sheriff Burgin was increased by another reward offered for the recapture and delivery to the sheriff of Dix, the Birmingham Railway, Light and Power Company contributing $1,000 to the fund. The motormen and conductors began taking up a collection looking to an additional reward.

Every deputy sheriff, municipal officer and constable in Jefferson county and in the adjoining counties have been urged to be on the lookout for the negro. It is now believed that there was a carriage in waiting in an alley adjoining the jail yard and that when Dix jumped down from the high wall he was placed in the vehicle and hastily driven off.

Dix belonged to half a dozen secret societies. Sheriff Burgin and his deputies have not been idle since the negro murderer escaped. All kinds of rumors are being run down. A report came in during the morning that the negro had been captured at Trussville, in the northern part of the county, but this report was like the rest of them. The sheriff and deputies made a thorough search of the cells in the county jail and discovered a dozen homemade knives and two razors. The bars sawed out of the cell and the window through which the negro murderer made his escape have been repaired.

Negro Escape Caught.

Montgomery, Ala.—Much excitement was created in the city by the rapid firing of many revolers on Intendencia street, near the business section. Bob Washington, a notorious negro, who has once been shot by a police officer, and who is now serving a five year sentence, escaped from the convict camp and came to the city with the avowed intention of killing a negro woman who had married the week before. The officers were looking for him, and half a dozen deputy sheriffs and policemen were on the street where he was expected when he appeared. He ran and several shots were fired at him. Being surrounded in a block by officers the negro would go from one street to the other to be fired upon. Finally in jumping a fence his pants caught in a picket, and he hung there helpless until the officers arrived and placed the handcuffs on him. A large reward had been offered for his capture. ff

Senator Pettus Home.

Selma, Ala.—Senator Edmund W. Pettus reached home last night from Tate Springs, where he spent a few days after the adjournment of congress.

"I slipped a little on the ice in Washington last winter," said the affable senator, "and I was heralded abroad as being in severe straits. A little later I had a slight attack and the world was informed that I had an apoplectic stroke. A few days before congress adjourned I had a regular old Cahaba chill, and I was desperately ill, but you boys see me, and I don't think I ever felt better."

To all appearances Senator Pettus is as robust and as full of vigor as ever in his life or for twenty years at least. His home friends, and they comprise everybody, have given him a royal welcome.

Terrific Rainfall.

Anniston, Ala.—Two of the heaviest rains ever known fell here Saturday afternoon at 2 and 6:30 o'clock. The first rain exceeded in immensity that of the Galveston flood. The total precipitation for fifty-eight minutes was 2.77 inches, the largest volume for five minutes being .60, while that at Galveston was only slightly in excess of .40. Mr. Clarke, of the weather bureau all his experience. The heaviest wind velocity was thirty-five miles, at 2:37 o'clock. There was also a fall of hail with the rain. Several stores were flooded and the stores badly washed, so that the damage will amount to several hundred dollars. Eros' book store was the principal loser, his loss being about $1,000.

Cullman, Ala.—The canning factory of the Cullman Fruit and Produce Association commenced business last week, and is putting up all the seasonable fruits and vegetable in the most cleanly manner and under the most attractive labels. The factory is probably the largest in the south, and will be of great benefit to truck farmers. beat all previous records. Strawberries can still be had here, and all other fruits and vegetables have done very much better than usual.

M. Gueade, a French socialist, says that when society is properly constituted nobody will have to work more than eleven minutes a day.

Quarantine Regulations.

Mobile, Ala.—Mr. Henry Goldthwaite, executive officer of the quarantine board of Mobile bay, has just received from Walter Wyman, surgeon-general of the marine hospital service, a circular amending the recent regulation of the repartment with regard to fruit vessels plying to United States ports which prevented their admission to entry till they had been five days out from the port of departure. The amended regulations allow the vessel to enter as soon as the crew, except the master and chief engineer, shall have been removed from the vessel, the living quarters fumigated and a new crew placed in charge. After unloading at dock all parts of the vessel must be fumigated simultaneously for the destruction of mosquitoes. The new crew will accompany the vessel to quarantine, when change of crews will again take place.

Condition of Alabama Banks.

Birmingham, Ala.—The abstract of reports made to the comptroller of the currency showing the condition of the national banks in the state of Alabama at the close of business June 18 places the total resources and liabilities at $45,390,320. The individual deposits were $24,948,962.97. The percentage of legal reserve to deposits, 20.84. Percentages to deposit of cash on hand, redemption fund and due from reserve agents, 26.50.

The total lawful money reserve in banks was $2,806,258, divided as follows: Gold coin, $394,362; gold treasury certificates, $401,030; silver dollars, $340,337; silver certificates, $256,004; silver fractional coin, $147,982; total specie, $1,539,716; legal tender notes, $1,266,534. ff

Farmers' Union Meet.

Bessemer, Ala.—I. A. Worley, of Guin, president of the Farmers' Union of the state of Alabama, has issued the call for the state union to meet in Bessemer on August 22, 23 and 24, and in the call gives the representation. The city of Bessemer will entertain the delegates while they are in Bessemer, and it is expected that from 400 to 500 progressive farmers of Alabama will be in attendance. The meetings will be held in Beavers' hall, on Third avenue. The railroads in Alabama will give a special rate of one fare, plus 25 cets.

One delegate at large will be allowed for each county union, and one for every 200 members or majority fraction thereof. Counties not having a county union, but having one or more local unions will be entitled to one delegate for each county.

Buys Coal Lands.

Mobile, Ala.—The Gulf Coal and Coke Company, of Mobile, sold to J. P. Hanson, president of the Georgia Central, and his associates 17,000 acres of coal lands located in Walker and Jefferson counties, this state. The consideration is said to be $1,250,000. Hanson's associates are said to be the Pratt Coal and Coke Company, of Birmingham.

Purchased 2,987 Bales.

Montgomery, Ala.—A large deal in spot cotton was consummated when Weil Brothers, Montgomery buyers, purchased 2,987 bales from J. A. Prestwood, of Andalusia. The cotton is stored in a warehouse in Columbus, Ga. It was raised around Andalusia, and is all of this year's crop.

To Entertain William T. Jerome.

Birmingham, Ala.—Committees have been named by the board of trade to entertain District Attorney Jerome, of New York, who will be in Birmingham July 20. John W. O'Neill heads the general committee, and C. C. Heidt is chairman of the committee on invitation. A banquet will be tendered Mr. Jerome.

JUMBO.

Editor Union:

I have seen all the candidates for sheriff. I don't know much about politics, but I think the best way to build up a party is to put in men that do most for the party. So now, boys, we all know Goodgame has been an untiring worker for the people's cause. I have not got anything to say against any other candidate, but me and my neighbors are for Frank Goodgame. Go it, Frank. You are gaining ground every day. Yours for the right,

WEST CHILTON.

Health not so good, some sickness around; but crops are looking fine in this community. J. G. Greene and wife, of Birmingham, are visiting his father, W. A. Greene, this week. Our Farmers' Union local at County Line is progressing nicely, and are "doing business" right along. I saw F. J. Fitts a few daysago and he looked just like a first-class sheriff, and if the people everywhere else are like those around here he will sure be our next Sheriff. I don't think we can beat him; he has stuck to the party from the start; the first vote he ever cast was for the populist party. There are a few around here that don't take UNION, and now I say to them, subscribe for it and get a paper that is worth reading. It will do you good and gives you all the news from all over the county.

"LITTLE J."

HERE'S TO FITTS.

Maplesville, July 10, 1906.

Editor Union:

There is not much news over in this part of the county. The people are moving along quietly and attending strictly to business, and as they consider (and rightly) politics a part of their business, they are taking some interest in that. However, there is no excitement or disturbance along that line, for it is all one way. At this time more interest is being manifested in the election of a sheriff than any other officer. We are all standing almost as a unit for one man, and that man is Felix J. Fitts. I think it a conservative estimate to say that in the primary in this part of the county, Fitts will lead all other candidates three to one, and when he is nominated, as he is sure to be, he will defeat the democratic nominee by at least 300 majority. Then here's to Fitts, one of the best and truest men in Chilton county.

TOM C. PERRY.

MARS HILL.

Health here is not very good. W. H. Gothard's little daughter is quite ill, but all hope for her speedy recovery. Our Sunday school is doing well under Superintendent J. M. Gothard. Our Farmers' Union local is progressing nicely. Our settlement had a fine picnic on the Fourth at F. M. Langston's grove—free ice cream and lemonade and plenty of good things to eat, with good music. I want to say to "Farm Hand" that we have a telephone in our settlement, but that we go to church and Sunday school just the same, for that is what will make us better men and women. We're sorry that we have any folks that would rather have their children go fishing Sunday than to Sunday school and some that will whip their children for wanting to go to Sunday school. Politics is kind of quiet in this part, but F. J. Fitts stands pretty well around here. I want to say, Hurrah for The Union, Hurrah for Chilton.

PLOW BOY.

WALNUT CREEK.

Editor Union:

Please allow us space in your valuable paper to say a few words. Rev. J. F. Ledbetter filled his regular appointment at our church here last Sunday. We had many welcome visitors from Concord. Messrs. J. Baker and R. W. Taylor left for Birmingham Sunday, where they will attend the Massey Business College. The departure of R. W. T. does not leave some of the girls all smiles. Daniel Parrish has also gone to Birmingham, which causes some of our young ladies to frown. Well, C. D. Duke and his brother will soon pay Chilton a visit, and then the girls will be all smiles. As this is our first letter to The Union we will close with best wishes to the paper and its many readers. TWO COUSINS.

NEWS AND NOTES FOR WOMEN

WHERE "DON'T" IS NEVER HEARD.

The most interesting feature of a fashionable home in upper Fifth avenue is the "Do Do Room," a completely equipped playroom, where the word "don't" is never heard. The idea of this juvenile paradise originated with paterfamilias whose childhood was marred by continually hearing "Don't do this!" or "Don't break that!"

The room itself is a large, sunny place, splendidly ventilated by plenty of windows, which are safely barred. One end of the hardwood floor is uncovered, while the other has a thick woollen rug, fastened down so securely that acrobatic feats or any amount of running or sliding cannot loosen it. The walls, which are deadened, so that noises cannot penetrate to other parts of the house, are covered with blue paper, from which finger prints can be easily washed off. The pictures and electric lights are caged, this precaution making possible a mild game of baseball or any amount of handball or bean bag tossing.

The chairs (minus rockers) and the tables are made with rounded corners. The fear of breaking dainty bric-a-brac does not bother the little inmates of the Do Do Room and the built-in bookcase, where favorite books and magazines abound, has no glass doors to be kept away from or silk curtains which must not be touched.—New York Tribune.

TO BUY BLOODED HORSES.

Miss Kate Cassidy, a veterinary surgeon of Portarlington, County Leinster, Ireland, was a passenger on the White Star liner Baltic, which arrived recently from Liverpool and Queenstown. Miss Cassidy is on her way to the Blue Grass State to purchase a number of Kentucky thoroughbreds for her father's horse breeding farm in Portarlington. The farm, she said, with no little pride, has turned out many of the blue ribbon winners of the English turf and shows. Miss Cassidy was graduated from the Royal Veterinary College of Ireland six years ago receiving the F. R. C. V. S. diploma. Besides assisting in caring for the physical welfare of the horses in her father's breeding establishment, she has a good practice in Portarlington and the surrounding country. Her present mission to America is not a new experience, as she has been here on two similar errands within the last four years. She is tall, alert and comely and speaks with a pleasing Irish accent.

FOR BEAUTY SEEKERS.

A bad-tempered woman can never be beautiful.

Cultivate graciousness, for it is nature's chief charm.

Harmony in dress pleases more eyes than costly geegaws.

A well-balanced admiration of one's self is a great beautifier.

If you have no thought for yourself, remember that others admire beauty.

Beauty may be only skin deep, but it has more value than most kinds of plating.

Things which beautify an old woman may detract from the appearance of the young girl.

French women never allow themselves nor any one else to suggest that they are growing old.

Don't wait until tomorrow to think of the graceful form and comely face. For by that time middle age settles and formidable crow's feet will be with you to stay.

No woman need lack some kind of beauty. If nature has denied her a beautiful face she can make up for it by acquiring a wonderful grace of form, or such beautiful hands that she can be the envy of her set.

PROMISE TO "OBEY" DIDN'T COUNT.

If a bride wishes to make secret reservations to her promises at the marriage altar of course neither bridegroom nor clergyman can prevent her doing so. At a luncheon one day last week for a bride-elect the talk ran on the word "obey." The girls decided that part of the formula was obsolete. One young wife was at the luncheon, and it was recalled that she had promised to obey and had pronounced the word bravely. The girls teased her until at last she explained thus: "You see, in some churches you have to say 'obey,' and I was married in one of them. But when I came to those words I just crossed my fingers and so the promise didn't count at all. I tell girls to do the same when they go to the altar. It will avoid any argument with the clergyman—or the other fellow."—New York Press.

MAKE THE TOTS HAPPY.

Carry the idea of simple food and simple clothing into the children's lives and pleasures for the summer season. Let them stay out of doors from morning until night if they will, even eating their meals on the porch. Who does not remember the joy of eating on the porch when one was young. A low table with low chairs, and dishes that can be easily supplied with fresh ones if broken, will make the children happier and stronger if meals are served there during the summer. Plant vines which grow quickly about the porch, making the little "diningroom" a nest of green. Open the eyes of the children to the beauties of nature, the shadows, the flowers, the birds and insects, colors, sounds and simplicity of everything in nature's great scheme. Of course, to flat dwellers, most of these pleasures are impossible.—Scranton Tribune.

IN CHARGE OF AMIR'S HAREM.

To Mrs. Sarah J. Otney, a sister of Mrs. C. D. Peters of Charlotte, Mich., belongs the distinction of being the first white woman to be received in Cabul, the capital of Afghanistan, a city of 70,000. Mrs. Otney has gone to Cabul to take medical charge of the 3,000 women in the Amir's harem.

Europeans are not allowed in the city at all, except when in the employ of the Amir and under his protection. Mrs. Otney was a resident of Hillsdale, when she became engaged in the home missionary work in Adrian, Ann Arbor and Detroit under the auspices of Seventh Day Adventists' Church.

While the matron of Adventist College at Battle Creek she decided to go to India with her son-in-law and daughter, Dr. Robert S. Perry and wife, who are medical missionaries in charge of Adventists' sanitariums at Calcutta.—Detroit Free Press.

THE ECCENTRIC IN COIFFURES.

How to be original in the matter of coiffures is solved by society women by the wearing of the most aggressive of aigrettes. They are often a foot long and are pinned almost at right angles to the head making a smart but decidedly unusual effect. The Countess Leary, who is almost as noted for her eccentric headgear as for the work she does for charity's sweet sake, often wears an Alsatian bow of white which almost suggests a bonnet. This is most becoming to the Countess, but women who threaten to copy the fad should remember that an Alsatian bow is not for all styles of comeliness.—New York Press.

REDUCING EMPONPOINT.

Everyday Housekeeping says: Let the maiden inclined to embonpoint follow this advice and her form should become as willowy as she could wish: Rise early and take a cold bath rubbing vigorously afterward with a coarse towel or flesh brush. Drink a cupful of water before breakfast. Take one small cup of tea at breakfast, some dry toast, broiled fish or a small cutlet and a baked apple or a little fruit. At dinner, which should be at midday, take white-fish or meat, dry toast or stale bread, vegetables or fruit, either fresh or stewed; for supper, toast, salad, fruit and six ounces of water. Hot water, with lemon juice in it, is also good for supper.

TO SUE FOR HER DIPLOMA.

Because Miss Sadie Margaret McGinnis of Danville, Ky., one of the graduating class this year at Campbell-Hagerman College, Lexington, attended a dance given by the Kappa Sigma Society, the Faculty has refused to issue her diploma and a law suit will follow.

Her father, J. W. McGinnis, went to Lexington for the purpose of protecting his daughter's interests. It is admitted by the Faculty that the class standing of Miss McGinnis entitles her to a diploma, but they say that she forfeited her rights by leaving the college without the written request of guardian or parent.

IN NO HURRY TO MARRY.

Young girls are less eager to marry than they used to be. At one time a girl who remained unmarried when she had been out one or two seasons was almost a reproach to her parents and an unfashionable blot on the marriage market. But the unmarried have tacitly formed a union, which has as silently insisted upon the standard of the disgrace of their state being lowered.—The Lady.

LIKED BY BRIDES.

A new idea in wedding gifts is white china in single pieces or sets with the bride's monogram in gold and narrow gold rims and handles for the decoration. Pieces of the choicest china and the most artistic and beautiful shape are selected and the gift cannot fail to please the most favored bride.

FASHION NOTES.

Most of the new suits are without collars, but with the collar effect, got by trimming applied to break the long line.

What has been done to voiles and other thin stuffs this season makes the old idea of tailormade suits seem surprisingly crude.

Chemisettes and guimps are more in demand than ever. They are to be had in attractive variety in the shops.

There is a certain style in the dull kid ties that is somehow lacking in those of polished kid though the latter have the advantage of being of lighter weight.

FARM AND GARDEN

SHOULD FARMERS COMBINE?

Successful Farming asks this question, and then proceeds to answer it as follows:

This is an era of combination of forces and wealth. Everywhere is the effort to eliminate competition. It is being agitated and attempted as a necessary step among farmers. There is a scene in which combinations may be beneficial. Theoretically they work great good. When a great many individuals combine and agree not to fight each other it is possible to cheapen production and manufacture. But the practice does not always follow the theory from the consumer's standpoint. While the article may be more cheaply produced it is not sold as cheaply as though there was open competition. The great issues of the nation today are based upon the fact that combinations of capital may and often do result in monopolies that throttle competition and cheapen prices. There is the element of greed that almost invariably enters into combinations.

Co-operation is intended to eliminate the middle man so that the producer may get greater profits while the consumer pays no more than before. Such combinations are all right. But when farmers desire to combine on such a scale that they can force prices up indefinitely on what they sell, in what respect do they differ from Standard Oil, the beef trust, or any similar monopoly? If it is morally wrong to force consumers to pay a price fixed by these trusts, then it is wrong for the farmers to create an unnatural price for what they sell.

It is human desire to get even. The "eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth" rule was the old standard of trade relations, and that standard is well entrenched in the business of the world today. The "golden rule" is dust covered in most business houses. It is hard to endure monopolistic tactics in others, yet we have no moral right to become partners in the crime. Two wrongs do not make a right. It is far better to prevent the other fellows from doing the hoggish act than by setting in the trough, too. It is more consistent to appeal to the lawmakers for just laws and legal relief when we have our own hands free from a similar guilt. A farmers' monopoly is not one whit better than a coal owners' or meat packers' monopoly. Let us keep our hands clean and patiently fight for liberty and justice. A co-operative movement to hold produce and string it along instead of rushing it all to market at the same time is a splendid way to get what is due. The great injury to farmers is that farm products are sent to market at once when harvested. Thus it is that the middle man gobbles up the grain, fruit and vegetables and puts them away, and later, sells at an advance. What farmers need is to provide storage and hold some of the produce till some time after harvest. This will help the weaker brother to get his due, who, by force of circumstances, is forced to sell as fast as produced. Let justice, not greed, be the ruling passion.

VALUE OF MULCH IN SUMMER.

Mulch is a covering, either of leaves, grass, manure or any protective material. It is nature's protective idea, and without it much of our wild flora would be impossible. She covers the flowers of the forest with a blanket of leaves that protects them during the bleak days of winter and through the early days of spring ere yet the leaves have clothed the tree and give grateful shade to the plants at their feet. In meadow and marsh the thick mat of grass protects those wildings of the bogs and fields, and we may learn a lesson of nature and go and do likewise if we will.

Through the early days of spring, and, indeed, until the hot dry days of July, little watering and not a great deal of cultivating will be needed, but with the coming of the summer heat the demand becomes more imperative, weeds multiply abnormally under the quickening sun, and each application of water, unless followed by an early stirring of the soil, results in a hard baked surface of the beds in quite liberal quantities. This not only insures protection to the plants, but solves the question of what to do with the lawn clippings. Though if one keeps a horse or chickens that ough: not to be a puzzle.

Before applying the mulch the beds should be put in a thoroughly good condition—free from weeds and well cultivated, mellow and free. The mulch may be brought well up around the stems of plants having little protective foliage—as the lilies—and tucked under the leaves of low growing plants like pansies. It must be added to from time to time, as it grows thin by drying and the mulch that seemed ample when placed will be a thin film after a few days' drying sun and wind so that each time the lawn is clipped the contents of the grass carrier should be spread over the beds. This is of further advantage in those beds bordering the lawn as the fresh grass is far more sightly than the old dead grass could be. The mulch once placed should not be disturbed, as it forms, under the influence of the dew and rain, a thick, impervious mat that effectually withstands the heat of the sun and drying winds, though freely admitting the rain and dew. But if it is disturbed by the scratching of hens the turning of water from the spout of a watering can rather than from the hose or other causes, it will not give satisfactory results.—Indianapolis News.

AN AMATEUR HOTBED.

Enough plants can be started in one small hotbed to stock a good-sized garden with vegetables and flowers.

There are three types of hotbed that are within the means of the ordinary amateur gardener.

The first is the temporary bed in which the manure is spread on the top of the ground to the required depth and a portable frame placed over it.

The second differs only in having a shallow pit dug to hold the manure.

The third type is a permanent bed, the frame being made two and a half feet higher, and built directly in a pit of that depth. In a bed of this kind the bottom should be tile-drained, and it is a good plan to cover it also with a layer of small cobblestones or plank. The outside should be well banked up with manure, earth or coal ashes.

The last type can be used not only as a hotbed in the early spring, but also when the manure and earth are cleaned out, it can be used in the fall as a storage place for plants that are not quite hardy, such as tea roses or for bulbs that are to be forced for winter bloom.

Of the three forms above mentioned the first is the easiest and cheapest to make and therefore the one best suited to most beginners. The Garden Magazine.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

Every fence corner or other obscure place should have a fruit tree set in it.

Bush beans are the easiest to grow. They require little space and yield a large supply.

If you neglect the trees after planting them it is not the nurseryman's fault if they die.

As soon as the hatching season is over, remove the males from the yards and give them as good quarters as possible, by themselves. This will be a benefit to both sexes.

Never drive cattle fast in hot weather. No animal suffers so much from being over-crowded as the dairy cow or the fat steer, both of which need to ge gently driven when moved from barn to pasture.

Whenever a sheep goes off to itself it is a sure indication that something is wrong with it.

Take note of the feeding capacity of the individual sheep and put a black mark against slow, mincing eaters and timid or untamable ones.

The best pen is the one that gives the pigs the most comfort.

If by accident you have a lot of poor butter don't put your brand on it and ruin your reputation by selling it to a good customer. Use it up at home.

The introduction of the blood of breeds that naturally yield rich milk will raise the test of natives or scrub herds as soon as the influence of those breeds has a chance to operate.

A small herd of cows well bred, well cared for, give better returns per cow than a large neglected herd; besides this the master could have better control of a small heard than a large one.

FRUIT GROWN ON SOD.

The well-known Texas horticulturist, Mr. H. M. Stringfellow, has communicated to Farm and Ranch some interesting facts about the keeping qualities of peaches grown in sod orchards. He sent peaches from Texas to Richmond, Va., Rochester, N. Y., and Harrisburg, Pa., where they arrived in perfect condition without refrigeration. He also shipped pears grown on sod land in car load lots to Chicago without refrigeration and the pears arrived there in perfect condition. Mr. Stringfellow argues that much of the poor keeping quality of fruits and disposition to winterkill or injure by drouth, etc., is due to the cultivation of the orchard.

FOOD FOR HOGS.

It would be difficult to find a better food for young hogs and shoats than two parts (by weight) of wheat, two parts of corn and one of shorts; or a ration perhaps of equal weights of wheat, corn and shorts.

In Canada it was found that frozen wheat fed hogs, between sixty-one and 145 pounds in weight, gave an average increase of 15.46 pounds per bushel, while with heavier fattening hogs from nine to eleven pounds of gain was made per bushel.

It is said that Gen. Sir Redvers Buller is such an excellent cook that he would have little difficulty in obtaining a first-class chef's position in a West End hotel in London.

Because a girl admonishes her sweetheart to be economical before marriage it isn't safe to assume that she wants money to spend after marriage.

For the Younger Children....

FOR A LITTLE GIRL OF THREE.

Moo, moo!
What can I do
For my little girl of three?
I will eat the sweet grass,
I will give her a glass
Of my milk for her tea;
Moo, moo! that's what I'll do
For my dear little maiden of three.

Mew mew!
What can I do
For my little girl of three?
I will catch all the mice,
And they shall not come twice
To the cake, you'll see;
Mew, mew! that's what I'll do
For my sweet little maiden of three.

Bow, wow!
I will go now
With my little girl of three;
I will make a great noise;
I will frighten the boys,
For they all fear me;
Bow, wow! that is just how
I'll guard my sweet maiden of three.

Neigh, neigh!
Out of the way
For my little girl of three!
I will give her a ride,
We will canter and glide
O'er the meadowy lea;
Neigh, neigh! that's just the way
I'll help my sweet maiden of three.

THE GAME OF JACKSTRAWS.

The game of jackstraws is not a new one, but it is both interesting and exciting, more so than one thinks who has not given it the consideration it deserves. Let us describe it as it should be played, and you will see how diverting it is.

It is a game that is specially adapted to a number of players, the number being practically unlimited, except by the size of the table around which they sit. Each player is supplied with a slender stick, to the end of which a hook is attached by being neatly wrapped with thread. A small fish hook, a piece of thin wire or a pin will answer, the wire or pin being slightly bent at the end.

The jackstraws consist of little sticks of ivory, bone or wood, all of equal length, say, from four to six inches. A "pack" of them may number from twenty to a hundred, at your pleasure, the time consumed in the game depending on this.

The straws may be perfectly plain or some of them may be carved, as is done in France, to distinguish them from the ordinary ones. One, for example, may be king, another queen and still another jack. The object of this will be explained later.

To begin the game a player takes the pack, or bundle, of straws in his hand, holding them close and upright, with the ends resting on the table. Then he suddenly lets them go, and the straws fall outward on the table, in every direction. The player next on the left then takes his hook and with it draws out as many straws as he can, one after another, but he must do so without moving any other straw. If in taking out one straw he moves another his turn is over. Then the next player on the left takes his turn, and this continues until all the straws have been taken. Each player then counts his straws, and the one having the greatest number is the winner of the game.

If the king, the queen and the jack are used, the one who holds them, or either of them, counts twenty for the king, ten for the queen and five for the jack. All the other straws count one each.

The game may be played with long matches, the heads of which have been cut off. This will be convenient when the regular straws are not on hand.

Jackstraws is known and played in many lands, but under different names. In England, for example, it is called Spillikins; in Germany, Feder Spiel and in France, Ionchets, or Honchets, from the word meaning to strew. Sometimes the French made the king, the queen and the jack of different shape, so that they will be more difficult to pull from the pile.

Sometimes all the straws are numbered, say, ten number one, ten number two, and so on, when a hundred straws are used. Then, instead of counting each straw a point the numbers on them are added together, each scoring the sum of the numbers held in his hand.—New York Press.

DOROTHY'S PIANO.

Once upon a time there was a little girl called Dorothy Watts.

Dorothy could sing lots of pretty songs. She knew "In the Pleasant, Sunny Meadows," "Good Morning, Merry Sunshine," and "Jesus Bids Us Shine."

Dorothy's papa was a musician—that means he could play on the piano. He played such lovely music that it made everybody who listened to him happy. Dorothy wanted to learn to play on the piano, too, but they had no piano at her house, only one at her papa's studio, away down town, where he was all day teaching big people to play on pianos.

Well, Dorothy had an Aunt Annie, who loved her very much, and this aunt had lots of money, so she promised Dorothy that when she was seven years old, on her birthday she would buy her a piano, and that very day would begin to teach her how to play on it.

Dorothy could hardly wait till her birthday came. She knew her auntie always did what she said, so she was sure she would have the piano on her birthday.

Well, just two days before Dorothy's birthday her Aunt Annie thought she had better go down town and see about the piano.

So she went to the music store and said:

"Please show me some of your very nicest pianos."

The man said: "I am sorry, but I've only one left."

Auntie looked at the piano, was all scratched and marred, so she said:

"This will not do at all. However am I to do? for I promised child, and I must keep my promise I can at all."

Well, there was another piano away at the other end of the store, started to go there. There were street cars in that part of the city, so she had to walk nearly a mile, she got there the man in the store said, "I'm just out of pianos. Sold one this morning."

So auntie had to go home, not knowing where Dorothy's piano coming from, and was very much when she got home! She told Dorothy about it and she was ing, bright and early, she went to railway station and took the train Benton. Benton was a city thirty miles away. You see, auntie was going to Benton to buy Dorothy a piano.

It was a very hot day, the train full of people, and the lady was tired on the train, and she was herself.

"How silly I am to come away to get a piano for a little girl, had told Dorothy that there were no in the shops I am sure she would have minded about it," she thought, "But I promised, and I must keep my promise if I can."

At last she came to the store, got out of the car and went into the store.

"Please let me look at some of your pianos," she said to the man in charge.

"I'm sorry, madam," he said, "but I just sold the last one a few minutes ago, and I am expecting a new one the first of the week."—Modern Hazine.

FIGHTING HARES

Mr. Richard Bell had been a friend and stayed to supper. After he thought it was time to go home friends accompanied him to the In "My Strange Pets" he told very pretty and unusual sight then witnessed:

My friend and I were sitting the doorstep a conversation table, when were startled by exclaiming excitedly:

"What is that? Look at the

When we turned our eyes in direction in which she was pointing saw two small figures, hares, dancing in the bright moonlight, seemed to be waltzing, sometimes vancing and retiring and at other stooping down and bowing to other, while all the time they were tering a peculiar puffing sound.

The lawn was a large one and we first saw them they were a way from the door. We all felt certain amount of awe, and were unable to account for the appearance.

As the dancing went on they proached nearer and nearer to the lawn. When at last they were enough for us to discern clearly we discovered they were buck hares engaged in a fierce

Now, what's the openin' break and the preliminary move, as it were, toward achievin' this yere quest f'r a skirted spud-peeler? Do I take a stand on o' them big streets and at the point of a dirk hold up every ribbon wearer that sashays by and ast her questions 'bout her 'bility t' cook and wash and iron and sew and do up the boss' wife's hair, or do I—'

"Well, I could see that Chuck was some liable to make a rockpile finish there in Kansas City if I didn't get in to the extent of handing him a tip or so as to the prevailing methods in civilization of engaging serving women, and so I steered him to an employment agency and myself unreeled to the fat woman in charge of that plant the qualifications desirable in a ranch-house servant. The fat woman asked me a lot of shrewd questions about the ranch and the ranch people, and I couldn't do any more than tell her that old Triangle-T was the finest outfit, with the whitest boss and the nicest boss' wife in Arizona—all of which was on the level.

"That was a lucky fat woman for Chuck. She had the goods all ready in stock, it seemed, which was why she was asking me so many questions. She had on her list a widow—oh, a woman about thirty-odd, she said—whose man had been killed in a coal mine accident about six months before. The widow's name was Kate McGlone, and she lived across the river in the other Kansas City—the one in Kansas. The fat woman thought Kate McGlone would not mind going West, because she had a brother working in a mine somewhere in New Mexico.

"'This,' delightedly remarked Chuck when he got outside with Kate McGlone's address on a slip of paper, 'is sure some easy. It's as easy as stampedin' a bunch o' locoed cattle plumb into the corral and then oncoilin' a spool o' barbed wire around that corral to keep 'em there—it sure is.'

"So Chuck and I charter a caloosh and spin over to Kansas City, Kan., to give Chuck a chance to make a lariat throw for this Kate McGlone and get that errand off his mind.

"Kate McGlone's address was a rickety, tumble-down shanty in a long row of them, occupied by coal miners and their families, but, poor and common as it was on the outside, it was neat, though uncommonly bare, inside—the furniture had been going out piecemeal for the necessaries of life since Kate's man's death, we found out afterward.

"But the neatest thing in or within forty miles of that shanty was Kate McGlone herself. For Kate was a staving beauty from the far south of Ireland—a smashing, handsome woman of buxom sinuosities that were discernable even arrayed as she was in her poor calico dress.

"Chuck took one look at Kate McGlone when she came to the door in response to our knock. Then he acted like he was going to sit down on the rickety steps and take a rest for himself. There was no manner of doubt whatever that Chuck was all in, all right, so powerful was the immediate impression created upon him by the looks of Kate McGlone. Chuck could not much more than wobble in when she invited us into her poor little old stripped outfit, and when he thought Kate wasn't looking Chuck gave me a kick on the leg that I can almost feel yet.

"For her part Kate cast quite a number of sidelong glances at Chuck when he seemed to be not paying any attention. Chuck was something good to look at, an arrow-straight ombrey, two inches above the six foot mark, broad as a door at the shoulders, and with as good a head and countenance as you'd ever see on a cow-thumper if you looked from the Columbia to the Rio Grande. I'd seen many a smart woman in Kansas City wheel in her tracks to take another view of Chuck after he'd gone by, although Chuck himself didn't know that there was much difference between his looks and a jackrabbit's, not being any whatever stuck on himself, so to speak.

"Yes, Kate would take the ranch job, she said after Chuck had nudged me to the centre and made me tell her all about it. There was nothing to keep her in Kansas City, now that—well, she didn't say what, but we understood all right, and coughed a-plenty so's to get her off that. She'd like to get within reasonable distance of her brother in New Mexico, and she had no children to hobble her movements. We had come at an opportune time.

"Chuck didn't say thirty words while Kate McGlone was telling me that she could do all the things a ranch-serving woman would be called upon to do, but when she got to that Chuck crossed and recrossed his legs four or five times and twirled his sombrero around on his thumb and cleared his throat several times, and then he asked her, in a hoarse, embarrassed kind of way:

"'Some few on the cook, I reckon, Mrs. McGlone?'

"Kate smiled confidently at that, and replied that she regretted that she had no means of proving it to him by laying a meal before him, her larder not being exactly overflowing.

"'A sure-enough hungry camp, this yere K. C.,' said Chuck then. 'Ain't never been so hungry nowheres as I am yere. Could get away with a coyote, pelt and all, yere and now. Was goin' to suggest, Mrs. McGlone, that maybe you wouldn't mind, s'posin' I'd bike around and rummage f'r a armful o' the eats on the hoof—maybe you wouldn't mind pansizzlin' the same f'r me and my podner yere, so's we wouldn't have t' hike t' none these onery grub plants that's all lugs and nothin' t' eat on.'

"Kate McGlone's smile of acquiescence when Chuck got off that delicate suggestion was worth seeing. Of course she would be glad to cook anything for us. She hated to be so situated as to have folks bring in their own stuff to be cooked, but—

"Well, Chuck was already out of the door and sailing for the nearest market house at a pony lope. That left me behind with Kate McGlone, and I put in the time plugging for Chuck. Kate sat with her hands in her lap and looked a-plenty interested while I talked of Chuck's good points.

"In about twenty minutes Chuck staggered in under a load of eatables big enough for a juniper-country hired man's mess—about seven pounds of rich, thick-cut lamb chops, sack of new spuds, four cans of the most expensive French peas he could nail, four boxes of strawberries, box of new tomatoes and a raft of other truck, as much of it as he could carry, and Chuck was a powerful strong carrier, at that. Kate conducted Chuck to the kitchen, where he sat down the basket for her to go through and do what she liked with, and then Chuck and I sat out on the little front porch and smoked our corncobs and inhaled the fetching aromas that presently began to float from the kitchen. Chuck was pretty taciturn during that smoke. He seemed to have a lot on his mind. The only remark he made was when a particularly appealing whiff of those broiling lamb chops slipped through on to the front porch and passed our nostrils, and then Chuck knocked the ashes out of his pipe and pulled his hat over his eyes and, looking at me solemnly, observed:

"'Jes' because their names happen t' be McGlone and such like, they don't all have t' be kitchen mechanics, podner. I've knowed a heap o' range bosses t' be disapp'inted some in little matters sence I been punchin' cattle, and no mistake,' with which mysterious utterance Chuck again relapsed into silence until Mrs. McGlone appeared at the front door and summoned us to the feed.

"I'm not going to try to describe that feed or how good it tasted. But, just to give a line on how good Kate McGlone was in fixing up little impromptu things of that kind, I'll remark that those southdown lamb chops were panbroiled by Kate, and she served 'em each on a little triangular piece of toast to sop up the good juices of the meat, with a little sprig of parsley from her back yard patch garnishing each chop. And that strawberry shortcake was one of those things that you could just take a bite out of and then throw your head back and listen to the music, And the rest of it was to match. We just ate and ate for half an hour or so without a recess, and then Chuck pushed his chair back a little to give himself some breathing space.

"'Which I'm bound to remark,' said Chuck, then, looking square at Mrs. McGlone, 'that they's other jobs, 'sides that o' which me and my podner spoke, out yonder on the old Triangle-T, a-waitin' f'r a lady what knows so much about heavin' th' eats t' the centre as you all do, Mrs. McGlone. Better jobs, too, in a way. One of 'em in partic'lar is a hull heap better, the on'y drawback t' the same bein' that it involves livin' alongside o' the meanest, satamountest, onneryest, no-'countest ombreys this side o' Yuma or that other warm place—the same ondesarvin' indivi-jool bein' a ombrey by the name o' Al (long f'r Chuck) O'Mallon, which is here present t' take whatever punishment is a-comin' t' him.'

"Kate McGlone blushed very red at that. As for me, I always knew when to duck. I bolted what remained of my last hunk of strawberry shortcake and then I grabbed my hat and told Chuck that I'd meet him at our hotel later along in the evening. I passed a hasty thank-you to Mrs. McGlone for the feed, and then I made my getaway.

"'You all want to keep sure sober, podner,' Chuck called after me as I hiked out, 'because if I'm as lucky as I'm beginnin' t' feel I'll be needin' a pal as a witness t' some doins' in these yere parts d'rectly. I sure hope so.'

"I stood up with Chuck when they faced the priest a while before noon the next day. Kate in a powerful becoming suit of ready-made togs that Chuck staked her to, and looking as fresh and wholesome as a dew-streaked morning glory around the hour of dawn. After the ceremony I ducked again and executed a mysterious disappearance for four days, and when I showed up again Mr. and Mrs. Al O'Mallon were all ready and packed for the start for the old Triangle-T.

"One of the boys had the two-seated buckboard waiting for us at the station, and the four of us made the thirty miles to the ranch comfortable enough. The boss and his wife were on the porch when we drove up.

"'And this,' said the boss' wife, as good a woman as ever willingly passed up a month's sleep to nurse a poor sick man in a bunk house, 'and this,' preparing to greet Kate, 'is—'

"'Mrs. O'Mallon, ma'am,' said Chuck, stepping forward and looking sheepish, but pushing his handsome wife forward, and making a mighty sweeping sombrero flourish and bow himself. And then the boss' wife steps up and kisses Kate like the fine, sweet-souled woman that she was, plumb.

"The next day I was sent a-rustling to Tucson to snag out a Chinaman to take the place of the boss' wife's Dutch hired girl, who'd already jumped the ranch.

"That's how Chuck O'Mallon started out to 'rope a pot-walloper' and ended by getting a wife, and they're on their own Arizona ranch to-day, with as nifty a bunch of handsome, Irish-eyed young 'uns around 'em as you'd meet up with on a four-day cayuse ramble."

Of 100,000 children ten years old 31,000 will survive to the age of seventy-three.

Germany's shipments of cement to this country are dwindling noticeably. This country has cement of its own to sell nowadays. Last year it shipped abroad 1,067,000 barrels of cement, valued at $1,484,000. "Up to 1897," remarks Consul Harris (Mannheim), "the export trade in American cement amounted to practically nothing."

The director of the Breslau Hygienic Institute has announced the result of his mosquito war experiments. The first object was to destroy egg-bearing females, which were found in large numbers in Breslau cellars. Fumigation was used, and the number falling on the papers placed on the floors often ran up to over 2000 mosquitoes. For destroying the larvae in pools of water fifty grains of "larvicide" was put into a cubic metre of water and poured into the pool. This kills all the larvae within half an hour, but does not harm frogs and fish.

Malt is practically but another form of glucose. In the form of diabetes due to disease of the pancreas, the highest authorities advise the administration of glucose for amelioration of disease. Glucose may be justly called pre-digested starch, since in it is starch in the exact condition that we find prepared by the digestive organs for assimilation. Further, glucose is pre-eminently a fat-forming, heat-producing food. Under a diet of glucose man can perform more muscular work than under any other single article of food. Lastly, glucose not only is not injurious, but it is an essential article of food, without which, in some form, man cannot enjoy life.

The motor car of a Paris firm is designed to light the country residence of its owner or do other work in its hours of rest from travel. The car is immovably braked on two fixed rails placed in the auto house, the detachable crank provided is removed from the two-cylinder gasoline motor, and by means of a shaft with two universal joints the motor is connected with the dynamo or other machine to be driven. While this arrangement promises to be especially useful for furnishing electric light away from the usual power stations, it may prove a great convenience for driving pumps, wood saws or other domestic apparatus.

According to an official of the Botanic Gardens at Washington there are in New Zealand no less than 500 species of plants that have been introduced and acclimated since the colonization of the islands. The presence of these plants there is described, directly or indirectly, to the presence of civilized men. They have followed him, and, curiously enough, have driven before them some of the plants indigenous to the soil. Most of the invaders are small species, yet they have prevailed over large and vigorous native species. Man is a conqueror, and plants and animals which are able to thrive in his presence, and under the conditions that he creates, are overrunning the world in the wake of his conquests.

Sugar as a Complete Food.

Editor Ware, in the last issue of the Sugar Beet, cites one of his correspondents who mentions the excessive fondness of a lady friend for sugar. The sugar was eaten in a pulverized condition and about four and one-half pounds per day were thus consumed, and, on exceptional occasions, considerably more than that quantity. All other foods were put aside and during a period of twelve years she lived on nothing else and did not suffer any evil effects, and her fondness for that special diet remained the same. The sugar, being a carbohydrate, furnishes at the same time heat and strength, and in her case, at least, seems to have been a complete food.

The average man might question the authenticity of the whole statement, and if Editor Ware can substantiate it he will be doing a great work for sugar.—The Louisiana Planter and Sugar Manufacturer.

Paper Making Materials.

New materials from which paper can be made are continually being discovered. Recently pine waste has been successfully manufactured into that universal substance without which so many features of modern civilization could hardly survive. Fine paper can be made from corn stalks and from rice-straw. In addition to spruce, pine, fir, aspen, birch, sweet gum, cottonwood, maple, cypress and willow trees all contain fibre suitable for the manufacture of paper. Hemp, cotton, jute, Indian millet, and other fibrous plants can also be used for this purpose, so that there seems to be no danger of a dearth of paper.

Amending an Epitaph.

"Such an amendment," said Senator Tillman during a debate, "would destroy the bill's meaning as the meaning of the epitaph on old John Skinn's tombstone was destroyed. An amendment was tacked to John Skinn's epitaph. It consisted of one word—the word 'friend.' It was put on in the dead of night. The epitaph previous to the amendment read: 'He did his best.'"

BEWARE.

Some of the old political hacks that rode into office on the back of the Farmers' Alliance are trying to use the Farmers' Union for the same purpose. Brothers, when a man sends in his application to your local to become a member of our noble order, scan it closely, and if the applicant is a candidate for political office turn him down, at least until after the election. Keep politics out of our order. Don't let any one use it for a political stalking horse.

THE FOURTH AT WADSWORTH'S.

A number of invited guests from Clanton, among whom were Col. A. C. Smith, his two little daughters and his mother, Judge L. H. Reynolds and his entire family, Messrs. J. E. Robinson, Hugh Simpson, J. Earle Gowan and the writer, spent our nation's natal day on the banks of the Coosa; at that particular spot where W. W. Wadsworth's lumber plant is situated, which is sometimes yclept Rushton. On getting off the L. & N. at Cooper's we all boarded the "Cooper and Rushton Express," a train of an engine, one closed coach and two open coaches, which was in waiting to convey the guests coming by rail to Cooper's, the seven mile ride through the woods. The celebration was held in a well shaded grove, all fitted up with rustic seats and tables, with a dancing platform supplied with a nice string band. By the way, that platform was well patronized, many "tripping the light fantastic," among whom we saw Mr. F. A. Gulledge "cutting pigeon wings" and "swinging his partner" with a zest that none of the younger men could excel. Many of the guests strolled to the bank of the river, where Commodore B. F. Higgins, Sr.'s steam yacht "Nina" was moored, some going on board and taking a trip up and down the river. Everybody seemed to enjoy themselves, and they also enjoyed the dinner (when they got to it) of barbecued meat, aided and abetted by the contents of the well filled baskets which most of the guests brought with them. Of course some candidates were there, Candidate Gulledge being particularly active in buttonholing the voters, so much so that an onlooker said, "His perseverance is worthy of a better cause." About 3:30 p. m. Master of Transportation H. I. Honeycutt called out, "All aboard for Cooper," and we made a leisurely journey back to Cooper's, getting there in time to catch the L. & N. train for home, tired, but happy.

A. C. SMITH,
tf Chairman Sub-Committee.

JUST A VOTER AGAIN.

Mr. Editor:

I've stood the pressure as long as I can and can't keep quiet any longer. I must shoot another single barrel, but I won't put much powder in, as the game I am aiming at is small. Now, look here, I've stood round and looked wise just about as long as I intend to. I know I'd make a good representative and now Mr. Killgore is down and that leaves the field open, so I've run up my lightning rod hoping the lightning will strike it. It has struck all round me, but it never hits my pole, and say, I'm about ready to take it down and quit the whole business and make believe I wouldn't have an office as a gift anyway. Oh! what a petition that was in The Union asking Mr. Middleton to run for representative, and by the way, some democrats were on it, too. It does look strange, though, that all these petitioners were from the country, none from the town of Clanton; why, we are the smarest folks here in the world, and we ought to be consulted when there is an office to be given out. You see this makes me like the Democratic party as much as I do, for when they want to do anything they don't have to go to the country folks, they only have to see just a few of us smart folks here in town and what we say goes, and you see this saves a lot of trouble. And then these country folks are liable to make a mistake and we can't make a mistake. WE can't err. Why just look at the endorsements of Bro. Adams for commissioner of agriculture in the last Banner, and you'll see the difference; all of his is from the town of Clanton, and Mr. Middleton's from the country. Don't you see how easy it is to be a democrat and live in Clanton, and what great advantages we have? Why, no matter how much the democrats here cuss a man when he is out of sight they fall in behind him like a flock of sheep when the boss says so. I tried to tell you of some of them a while back, and I say now that just as soon as we democrats get control of this county the trouble will be all over, no need of asking what the people want. We'll just "get together" here in Clanton and fix up things to suit us. Oh! won't we have a bonanza? Won't it be better for us few to look after the county affairs than to consult all these country folks like these populists and republicans do now? I'm on the fence and just as soon as these democrats get in "over kerwhop" goes me. Then I won't have to worry with these country jakes no more. It's "Goodby Susie" to them. They won't be needed in our business. But do you know I was just thinking how long I'd have to sit on the fence before the democrats get in? I'm not going to get on a sharp edged rail or barbed wire to wait. You bet I won't. I hope Mr. Gulledge does not feel bad when he sees democrats petitioning Mr. Middleton to run for the legislature (and some committeemen at that). But then these democrats that live out in the country don't amount to much, anyway; of course just before an election we big folks here in Clanton have to pat them on the back and tell them that they are mighty good fellows; but if we democrats ever do get control of the county affa this patting on the back w all be off. Well, Mr. Killgore has come down and shown his patriotism and loyalty to his party and friends, and so I reckon it is up to Middleton and Gulledge. It will be "swing your partners all the way round and balance" to the people in a few days and right there I'm afraid Gulledge has got the advantage of Middleton, for I hear he is a fine dancer, and I don't know whether Middleton is or not. Gulledge would make a good representative in one way; he would get anything he wanted from the legislature. Don't you remember how he got the stock law through the legislature, though it was opposed by Representative Pounds and almost all our people; but Gulledge and maybe a dozen others wanted it, and so stock law was passed for Beat 5. But Mr. Gulledge found out that he could put it into effect, and when after a while the people were consulted the law was repealed by about 10 to 1. Yes, I tell you, Mr. Gulledge has a strong (?) reputation as a legislator, and if he beats Middleton he will shove things through. But as to beating Middleton, my, my, won't that be a job? He'll have to dance; he'll have to sing, and he'll have to do many a thing before he beats Middleton. I'm really sorry for Hawthorn, poor fellow; he did not consult us Clantonites before he came out. I suppose he just thought ANY democrat had a right to run, but I'm afraid he'll not get in a trot much less a run. Say, I've heard some fine things of late, which will be good reading for Chilton county people. It is about "harmony" and "getting together." I'll give it to you later when the game gets up. We tried getting together once, and I tell you if that is the kind of "peace" they mean, I don't want any more such "peace" in mine. Well' let's all keep cool and keep our own counsel, and on the 6th day of August we will name our officers for the next four years.

JUST A VOTER.

THOS. HOWARD'S APPEAL TO HIS RACE.

Editor Union:

I want to say a few words to my race in regard to our present needs and future benefits. First, we should take more interest in the county in which we live, as well as our homes, churches and Sunday school. What a pity it is that every colored man does not pay his poll tax; only a very few do so, the others seem to have given up all hope of citizenship in spite of the promises in the new constitution to register all those who pay taxes on a certain amount of property ($300.00). My dear people, let me say to you let us pay up our poll tax and so make citizens of ourselves as far as we can do so alone. We will have the support of the good white people of Chilton county in this effort to better ourselves. I want you to know that the poll tax paid by us colored people is for the education of the colored children. Did you see what Hon. Mr. Bowie, of Alabama, said about us in congress? That we would not pay poll tax nor register, and that "less than 2 per cent of us have paid poll tax." Now, I want every colored man in Chilton county to pay his poll tax this year and pay up his back tax, too. Another thing about you shrdl too. Another thing I want you to do for yourselves is this. Do you know that everybody that owns $300.00 or more of property and pays taxes on it, or who owns 40 acres of land that he lives on, can register this year? Now, I hope that every one of you in Chilton county who has this property qualification will go to the places, at the times given notice of in the papers, carry your tax receipts and duplicate assessment list with you to show to the registrars. Get a move on yourselves; the time is flying, you that read this paper must urge others to read it. Take THE UNION that is published in your county, its columns are full of truth and its writers fill its pages with sound sense and business thoughts and tell you about the clean way. I want to see you all at next tax paying. Yours very truly.

THOMAS HOWARD.

COMMENDS KILLGORE.

Editor Union:

It has been some time since I have intruded on your space; therefore you will permit me a few words in regard to Mr. M. A. Killgore, and that is to say that although he has withdrawn from the race for representative, that there will not be a more active man in the coming campaign. It is true that some people think there is some odium attached to Mr. Killgore on account of his having resigned the sheriff's office, but could the people know all the facts connected with that affair they certainly would have different views, he being surrounded by traitors of his own party who had gone over to the enemy and were safely housed in their bomb proofs. So I say, hurrah for faithful old Moses. It does not take office to keep him faithful in the ranks. Yours for the cause,

L. B. POUNDS.

CANDIDATE GOODGAME'S LETTER.

Clanton, Ala., July 9, 1906.

Editor Union:

On last Monday I thought that I would make a canvass of my old home portion of the county, and went through beat one, and beat two to Jemison. It has been about sixteen years since I resided in this portion of the county, and there has been such wonderful improvements that it did not seem like my old home. Where there was nothing but wilderness and vast forests when I resided there, are now churches, school houses and farms. I desire especially to mention the Rocky Mount school building. This is a magnificent structure, and reflects great credit upon the citizens of that community. The best prospect for crops, especially corn and cotton, that I almost ever saw anywhere is to be found along the route of my travel. Commissioner W. H. Conway has about three acres in corn, experimenting with what he calls the "Stunted Process," that will produce fifty bushels to the acre if nothing happens to it. It occurs to me that this is a great improvement on the ordinary way and would be beneficial to all of our farmers if they would adopt it.

Well, Mr. Editor, I must hasten this letter to a close for fear it may take up too much of your valuable space, but I tell you in conclusion, that I only traveled ten miles in half the day; almost lost sight of the fact that I was a candidate at times, attracted by the wonderful improvements that have been wrought by the hands of these industrious and enterprising people, who, by their energy and thrift, have made a vast wilderness blossom as a rose.

Yours truly,
J. F. GOODGAME.

NEED MORE.

Health here is very good at present. Well, we did have a nice Fourth—fine weather, lemonade and ice cream and a fine watermelon raised by J. H. Jones. Crops are looking fine here, but rain would be appreciated. A lot of our young people went to Thorsby on the Fourth, and all report a good time. Among them were Misses Cynthia and Lucinda Littlejohn and Messrs. J. W. and J. H. Jones. The Jackson and Jones saw mill is doing a good business. J. H. Jones and wife visited Lomax Sunday. They say that Gip Henley is quite sick. We hope for his speedy recovery. J. W. went across the swamp Sunday. What's up? W. C. Jones and wife visited W. D. Z. Foshee's Sunday. Miss Dovie Smith entertained a number of girl friends Sunday afternoon. Now, friends, if you have not got good reading matter in your homes, get The Union at once, for it will interest you very much. With best wishes to The Union and its many readers,

JUST A BUTTERFLY.

MR. MIDDLETON RESPONDS.

Clanton, Ala., July 11, 1906.

Editor Union:

I desire through your paper to acknowledge the very high compliment paid me by the populists and republicans in requesting me to make the race for representative of Chilton county in the legislature of Alabama, and to express to them my appreciation for the same.

A number of my Democratic friends have also urged me to make the race against the organized Democracy of this county, and have pledged me their support in the event I did so, for all of which I am deeply grateful.

I had not expected to become a candidate for the Legislature, or any other office, but it has been my purpose all the while, since my recent political alignment, to put forth my very best efforts to elect the ticket nominated by the people's primary. The fact is, I do not think a new convert to a given political party should be given preference over the man who has always been found fighting in the ranks of that party, and it was only after Mr. Killgore had come down, and Mr. J. H. Thomas and Mr. C. W. Reynolds and others declined to become candidates that I would entertain any idea of making the race. After this action of the above named gentlemen the people, in casting about for a candidate, have seemingly centered on me, as is evidenced by their expressions through the press and in person.

Now, while I believe a man entering a political party, making new political affiliations, should not force himself upon the people as a candidate or dictator, yet if it be the will of the people that he serve in a given capacity, I feel that it is his duty to respond. Therefore, in view of the fact that none of the old party men are out for the place, and of the further fact that I have been solicited by numerous citizens from every section of the county to make the race, I have decided to become a candidate for representative in the legislature of Alabama, subjet to the action of the people's primary.

So far as party work is concerned, it doesn't matter whether I am nominated or not. In either event I intend to use my utmost ability to elect your ticket. If I should be your nominee, I have great assurance of election, and I promise you now that, in the legislative halls of Alabama I shall be faithful to my trust.

During my brief career, a generous public have shown me courtesies of which I am very proud, but this manifestation of confidence, springing as it has spontaneously from the hearts of the people of my county, is the highest compliment that ever came my way. And while I am not going to be so strenuous as to say that, before being guilty of an act of infidelity, I will burn off some of the members of my body, yet I will say that, no matter when, or where or how, if by word or act I should seem to have become unmindful of this manifestation of your confidence, all you need do is to place your hand upon my heart-strings and you will feel appreciation beat in every throb.

J. OSMOND MIDDLETON.

SARDIS ITEMS.

Editor Union:

We farmers here are very busy, as the rains have come and the grass is growing. Crops are good and watermelons plentiful. It does look like the candidates would be more numerous, but we have seen none except Mr. Lee Hayes, who was here a few days ago shaking hands with his many friends. We can't read the minds of others, but from the way people talk here, he has a large majority in this part. We all recognize the fact that he has been tested in the sheriff's office and find him to be the best man this county has ever had in this position. Now, gentlemen, we want men to fill our offices and when we test a man and find him true, why not give him the office that he fills best; none can say that Mr. Hayes ever showed a tyrannical disposition when he was in office. He always tried to favor those who were in trouble. They could always rely upon him as their friend, notwithstanding he never failed to discharge his duty. This is from the east end of beat 8.

REPUBLICAN.

MT. PLEASANT CHURCH.

Editor Union:

I am sure you will allow me a small space in your good paper to say a few words in regard to our Sunday school. We are glad to say that it is progressing nicely under the control of Superintendent A. C. Robinson. We are preparing to have a Children's Day here July 21 (Saturday). All are respectfully and cordially invited to come and bring their baskets full of good things to eat. Location is five miles northeast of Jemison, on the Calera and Clanton road. All come and bring your "Singing for Joy" books. We will endeavor to entertain you to the best of our ability.

ONE OF THE SPEAKERS.

BEAT FOUR.

Mr. Editor:

Please allow me to say a few words to the people of our county. I was at Highland the fourth Sunday in June and heard some as good singing as I ever heard in my life. It was a well spent day, singing praises to God on high, and great majority enjoyed the day. But some of the boys had some whiskey along, I reckon to show off, as maybe they thought they wouldn't be big enough without it, so they stuck a bottle of "booze" in their pocket and I expect felt like "papa's little man." If a boy would only stop and think of himself and other people also, he would stay away with his "booze." It has got so now-a-days that some young men when they hear tell of an all-day singing they have got to "get rich" before they go there. Maybe they think that the girls will look at them and brag on them. No, boys, good girls don't want no such company. And girls, if you would only just have nothing to say to any young man who comes to talk with you when his breath smells like a whiskey barrel, he would soon quit it. If they want to get mad with you just let them get mad. The young men ought to be ashamed of themselves, but many of them have no shame, but think it is a big trick to have their pocket bottle and their pocket gun along to church. Young men, for God's sake quit it; it is only sending your soul to hell every time you do it. This is my first letter, so goodby, friends, and do heed my advice.

"IT'S JUST ME."

A GOOD TIME.

There will be a basket picnic in the interest of the farmers at Kalonah July 19. Everybody invited to come with a full basket. Good speaking will be the order of the day.

THE COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

As the program shows, we are to have Miss Minnie Kennedy, the state primary secretary, at the Sunday school convention in Clanton July 21 and 22. In this we are particularly fortunate, for Miss Kennedy is one of the most prominent and efficient workers in Alabama. She will speak ... days of the convention and on Sunday morning will teach a class of little children, illustrating modern methods. This is always an interesting feature and will be specially valuable to the primary teachers.

We are to have also Rev. J. A. Jenkins, the new field worker who has been appointed since the last state convention. Mr. Jenkins is a Baptist minister and resigned the pastorate of the West End church, Montgomery, to accept the appointment as a state Sunday school worker.

... who attended the county convention in Maplesville in ... remember with great pleasure Mr. Frank Stillwell, of Selma, prominent in the Dallas county association.

In absence of the county president, who was ill, he presided over the meeting and his genial manner and skilful management of affairs helped materially in making the convention so successful. We will heartily welcome Mr. Stillwell to Clanton and sincerely hope that nothing will prevent his coming.

We expect also Mr. W. E. Holloway, of Montgomery. He feels specially interested in our association, as he helped to organize it ten years ago. He came to Maplesville last year and we are very glad indeed that he is to be with us in Clanton.

Especial mention is made of these four speakers because of their prominence in state Sunday school work.

Their presence at a convention assures success, for they have thorough knowledge and wide experience and this makes their help practical and valuable. G.

A WOMAN'S WAY.

When pa came home the other night he had a happy smile,
And said to ma that we would soon be livin' in great style,
Because a man had been around that day to let him in,
Just as a favor, on a thing that couldn't fail to win.
"He'll let me have the stock," says pa, "at fifty cents a share
If I'll subscribe to-morrow, for there's little left to spare.

"He'll let us in at fifty cents for every share we buy,"
Says pa, while ma she didn't seem to hardly bat an eye;
"And in six weeks from now, if we've a mind to let it go,
We'll get ten dollars for each share—that's estimated low—
I've seen his papers and they're straight; there ain't a chance to lose—
Say, what's the trouble with you, ma? You don't seem to enthuse."

"If it's as good as that," says ma, "I can't quite understand
What makes him want to let it go. Of course it would be grand
To get the money, but I'd feel as though it wasn't fair
To rob him, as we would if we should take a single share."
"Confound a woman, anyway," says pa, "she always seems To want to wake a person when he's having pleasant dreams."

LAME CHARLIE'S "TOLE."

By Franklin Welles Calkins.

NEAR our ranch on Black Rock Creek lives Lame Charlie, who is a "wolfer." That is, he finds employment in assisting stockmen of North Wyoming to rid this region of destructive and increasing pests. He was for fifty years a "free trapper," and is now a little wizened man of seventy. More than twenty years ago a vengeful Ute lodged an arrow point under one of his knee caps, and hence the old man goes with a lame leg.

He very reluctantly narrates his own adventures, although he has passed through dangers without number. Only a few accounts of his narrow escapes have been drawn from him.

One narrative is of a "tole wolf," which led him into difficulties among hostile Assiniboins. A "tole" in Lame Charlie's category of mysteries is simply some natural bird or beast played upon by superhuman powers or by the magic of medicine men.

One winter back in the fifties he lived near Black Kettle's village of Cut Head Sioux on the north shore of Minni Wakan Lake. He was roused one evening by the fierce howling of a wolf within a few rods of his cabin door. He went outside with his gun, and immediately saw a wolf, as he believed—a big black one—sitting upon a snow drift. Lame Charlie fired, and the creature yelped and ran. The trapper was filled with excitement.

The black wolf is not often killed or even seen. Only the year before McKenzie, at Fort Union, had paid August Lariviere $100 for a single skin, and had offered $150 for a mate to it. One hundred and fifty dollars! Lame Charlie swiftly donned his cowskin coat, his Cut Head overshoes and rackets and gave chase.

There was more than a foot of new snow, covered with a crust, upon which had fallen the rime and frost of several still, cold days. Lame Charlie had once run down a silver gray fox upon just that kind of snow. He believed that he had hit the wolf and could soon overtake it. The tracks were easily followed; the animal was running at a shuffling lope.

Although he could find no blood spots upon the snow the trapper was in nowise discouraged. He had more than once shot a gray wolf or a deer through hamper flank, and had had to hunt diligently for his bullet hole when the game was finally secured.

The night was very cold, but the air was still and bracing, and Lame Charlie enjoyed his chase. After an hour of stiff running he was rewarded with a sight of the beast loping, a hundred yards or so in front of him. He now felt sure of the black wolf's pelt.

He fired a random shot, and the creature did not increase its lead perceptibly. On they sped, hunter and hunted. Another hour passed, and still the flitting, bobbing black speck kept its distance close to the edge of indefinite things. The trapper "took up a hole" in his belt.

On they fled, man and beast, over hilly strips of land, across broad stretches of prairie, the hunter as tireless as his quarry. Three times the trapper tightened his belt, each time sure that another determined spurt would bring him within shooting range. If the animal were not hurt, he reasoned, it would long since have left him far behind.

At last the beast led him down into a deep, bushy creek known as Bad Coulee. Then Lame Charlie knew that his chase had stretched across twenty miles of crust. Still the hunter was not discouraged. He shuffled on over the rough ground, now and then jerking his rifle to his face, only to see the wolf disappear over the creek bank or behind a clump of willows. Several deer were startled from their beds, and clattered away upon the snow crust.

The animal he was chasing took to the high land, ran across a promontory and plunged again down a steep grade into the coulee. After it went the trapper. Squatting upon his rackets, with a whoop of victory, he shot down the long, steep slope as swiftly as the duck flies. He would quickly have overtaken his quarry, too, but the cunning brute suddenly shied and fled at right angles along the steep.

Turning to fire a shot as he passed Lame Charlie tripped, his gun exploded in mid air, and he tumbled, rolled and slid to the foot of the bluff.

He landed in a thick cluster of willows upon the creek bank, and when he had extricated his rackets and tumbled out of the thicket it was to find himself facing a row of Indian teepees upon a sheltered flat. Dogs began barking, and immediately inmates of the lodges, roused by his rifle shot, began to appear upon the creek bank opposite.

The moon had risen, and standing upon the ice within a few rods of them Charlie knew at a glance that these Indians were Assiniboins. Most heartily he wished himself out of the scrape. He was an adopted member of Black Kettle's band of Cut Heads, inveterate foes of all Assiniboins. If these Indians were made aware of that fact Black Kettle's camp would speedily lose a valuable ally.

He was too tired, however, to risk taking to his heels, and so, when an Indian hailed him he answered, "How! How!" and went boldly forward.

A group of blanketed figures quickly gathered round him. An Indian spoke to him in English, asking whence he had come. The trapper replied that he had chased a wolf which had led him far from his camp and immediately related the incident of his tumbling down the bluff. In order to divert the savage's mind from further inquiry Lame Charlie gave his adventure a humorous turn, describing minutely and with many gestures, the somersaults he had taken.

Those who were able to understand laughed with him and in turn repeated his story to their fellows. At the end a tall, muffled figure turned from the group and bade the hunter follow. A moment later Lame Charlie entered a teepee and seated himself before a heap of live embers. The tall Indian, still muffled in his blanket, threw fresh sticks upon the fire and blew the coals to a blaze. Then he uncovered his black pall and squatted upon the ground, confronting his guest. To his dismay Lame Charlie found himself face to face with Gaucher, the most villainous and widely known rascal of all the Assiniboin tribes.

Traders, trappers, voyageurs and various tribes of savages knew him under many titles—Left Hand, Knife Holder, Big Medicine, Poisoner, the Kid, Bear Leader and "The Napoleon of the Prairie." None knew any good of him. The man was a fomenter of difficulties, a secret and treacherous foe, a poisoner and deviser of inhuman cruelty to hapless captives. By the members of his own band he was held in superstitious dread.

Lame Charlie gave himself up for lost, for the cruel chief knew him personally. One glance into the evil, shifting eyes of Gaucher convinced the helpless trapper that his hours were numbered. Had his gun been loaded he would have discharged it at the chief instantly. But the weapon was useless, and outside he heard the muffled crunching of moccasined feet. The teepee was surrounded.

There was "medicine" in all this, so the trapper believed. The black wolf had been a tole of Gaucher. Truly, the man was powerful in his medicine. Thus reasoned Lame Charlie, and with the stoicism of an Indian captive he sank upon an elbow and awaited his fate.

Gaucher very deliberately filled and lighted a long stemmed pipe, and smoked in silence for a time, apparently devising some cruelty which should sustain his evil reputation. At last, moved, as it appeared, by angry mutterings outside his teepee, the chief knocked the ashes from his pipe bowl and spoke.

"You come from Black Kettle's village," said he. "I will send you back to him. But first give me your rifle so that I may know you will not fire back at us."

At this instant several of his bucks crowded in at the entrance of the teepee. Seeing there was no alternative Lame Charlie surrendered his useless gun. Then, at a word of command, several Indians laid hands upon the trapper and stripped him of his cowskin coat and two blue woolen shirts.

Why the savages left him his leggings, moccasins and his old skin cap Lame Charlie does not know, but doubtless it was from refinement of cruelty. Gaucher, secure in the belief that his victim must perish in the bitter cold, wished to prolong his misery to the last extremity.

The trapper was thrust half naked into the night and bidden to make his way homeward. As they shoved him out of the teepee, the Indians laughed immoderately at Gaucher's new freak of cruelty.

Keenly the trapper regretted that he had not clubbed his gun and striven to sell his life at some cost to these miscreants. As it was there seemed nothing to do but to run until he should fall, freezing and exhausted. Notwithstanding his recent long run he fled from the hooting, taunting Assiniboins at the top of his speed. The bitter night air cut him to the bone, and life lay in vigorous action.

He knew well that he could not in any event have finished a run back to his cabin—much less could he do so in his present plight. He determined to run as long as he could without freezing, then to remove his outer leggings, wrap his body as best he might and crawl into a drift, there to lie until he should either recover strength or die.

In this one desperate expedient lay his only chance of life. That he might increase that slender chance he kept to the bottom of the coulee, where no air was stirring and where the drifts were deep. For many miles the coulee led toward Minni Wakan Lake.

To check the action of frost he used his rough skin cap, chafing his body as he ran. At first it seemed that he must freeze through and through at once.

But as he exerted himself reaction came, and he felt a strange, tingling exhilaration, an airy lightness of body which enabled him to speed over the snow crust, going in long, lithe jumps like a jack rabbit.

As he bounded forward at the distance of a mile or more from the Assiniboin village, he saw over his shoulder a creature running at his heels. The black wolf again! He believed the animal was about to leap upon him and drew his only weapon which the Assiniboins had overlooked—a razor-edged pocket dirk.

As he turned to fight, however, the trapper found himself facing a brindled dog of ordinary size and certainly meek appearance. The animal fell upon the snow at a few yards' distance and whined pitifully, wriggling toward him as a bashful puppy does toward a visitor.

Greatly rejoiced the trapper called the dog to him and took it in his arms. The creature was scrawny enough, but there was warmth in its body and in its thick, shaggy coat. It would certainly help him to save life in a drift. He actually carried the animal as he ran, deriving grateful warmth from its body. This he did until several deer jumped from their beds among cornstalk grass the dog leaped suddenly away to give chase.

Bad Coulee, with its shelter of bush and tall grass, was the night resort of numerous bands of deer and elk.

Lame Charlie stopped to call back the dog, but finding himself freezing to the marrow presently sped on. After a time the dog overtook him, and again loped at his heels, but the man was now too much exhausted to carry a burden.

Again a band of deer jumped in front of him, this time out of a thicket of low willows. There were a dozen or more, and they scampered in all directions. A buck and a large, fat doe, in attempting to leap the creek channel, broke through the crust of a deep drift, and before the doe could extricate herself the dog was upon her, with its teeth in her throat.

With a stroke from his knife Lame Charlie killed her. Then with chattering teeth, crackling skin and freezing fingers he fell to work.

He peeled the deer's skin from its shoulders, skinned the hind legs whole, turned the pelt inside out, drew on his improvised coat and belted it tightly about the waist. Then he sat down to laugh at recent peril and to make a meal of leaf suet, while the dog also helped itself.

Lame Charlie did not laugh long, however, for the pain of frost bites setting in nearly drove him to distraction, until he had rubbed his hurts thoroughly with deer's tallow.

With his dog companion he reached his cabin late in the morning. His wrongs were quickly told in Black Kettle's village, and that chief, delighted to know the arch enemy was so near, immediately set out to surprise the camp. But the wily Assiniboins were on the march, and being only a hunting party, without squaws or children, easily made their escape.

To this day Lame Charlie is not wholly convinced that the black wolf and dark, brindled dog were one and the same creature. He admits, however, that this might have been the case; that a dog might have been stolen from one of the Red River posts, might have been driven out of the Indian village by their freakish curs, and might have been hunting a new master. Such a dog would have run from him and toward the Indian village so long as he carried a gun and continued to shoot at it.

And the fact that Lame Charlie admits this as a possible solution of his perilous adventure is really proof that it is so.—Youth's Companion.

A Receipt For His Brain.

An Ohio politician enjoys telling of a political discussion he once overheard in a country grocery store.

In some way the argument, quite a heated one, degenerated into a dispute in which one side took the position that the others were crazy to entertain such political tenets as theirs.

At this point a solemn-looking individual, who up to this time had held his peace, suddenly interjected:

"Gents, I want to say that I'm the only sane man here that has the papers to prove it!"

The crowd gazed upon him in astonishment.

"It is true, gents," continued the solemn-looking individual, as he drew forth a document from the recesses of his coat, "here's my discharge from the State Insane Asylum!"—Harper's Weekly.

A One Story Building.

Senator Clay, of Georgia, was once showing a constituent the sights of the national capital when the Washington Monument was reached.

"What do you think of it?" carelessly asked the Senator, as the constituent stood gazing in awe at the stately shaft.

"Senator," responded the Georgian gravely, "that's the darnedest, highest one-story building I've ever seen."

In porous glass, which is made in France, the holes are so small that neither dust nor draught can enter, and yet the ventilation is said to be excellent.

THE PULPIT.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. WILLIAM R. RICHARDS.

Subject—"Following Jesus."

NEW YORK CITY.—In the Brick Presbyterian Church, Sunday morning, the pastor, the Rev. William R. Richards, preached to a large congregation on "Following Jesus." He took for his text Matthew ix:19, "And Jesus arose and followed him and so did his disciples," and said:

The question comes to us, What it meant to be a Christian at the time when Jesus was living on the earth? Of course, the word "Christian" had not then come into use, but the fact is the Christian life existed, and our question is, "What was it like, how it began, how it showed itself, by what upward step would a man prove that he had made the great choice and had become what we would now call a Christian? If we want to know we have to look into the gospel of history, and, looking there, we find a plain and emphatic answer in one word, the word "follow." For the common way of announcing that any man had made the great choice for Jesus was to say, "He rose and followed Him." There are sixty-nine places where we read of one and another and of many at once who followed Jesus. That is the historic picture of the Christian life in those days. It is the leader walking here and there about the country and his disciples following Him. In the beautiful parable Jesus is described as the shepherd going on ahead and his sheep, who proved they were his sheep because they knew His voice, following him. That is the regular order of the sacred history: Jesus going before and the others following. But there is one singular marked exception to that order. It is all the more striking because it stands alone. Just once in the gospel of history this term is used in the other order. Some one else is leading, it is Jesus that is following. Who can this other leader be who spoke with such authority that Jesus followed him? You might think it was some great teacher and leader experienced in the things of God. But it was not so, because after Jesus had once claimed the position as teacher He never consented to follow another teacher. Or perhaps some supreme ecclesiastic, who, because of his sacred office could take precedence of Jesus. But it was not so, for if you look into the history you find that our Lord never for a moment rendered such supremacy to any church official. His word was always "Follow me." Or you might think it was some civil ruler, like King Herod or Pilate, or the great Caesar himself at Rome. But it was not so; He never consented to follow any great man on earth. He did say, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," but He was talking about taxes, not His personal allegiance; that was not one of the things that were Caesar's. It was not at the summons of any person that Jesus rose up and followed. What was it, then?

You remember the story. The man was named Jairus. He was, it is true, a ruler of the synagogue, but that meant little more than the leader of a prayer meeting. It would have been just the same had he been a beggar. He was a beggar on this occasion: "While Jesus spake these things, behold, there came a certain ruler, saying, My daughter is even now dead, but come, and lay thy hands upon her and she shall live. And Jesus rose up and followed him." The secret is out. There was a man who could speak for a moment in a tone of authority, then, to Jesus, because he spake through more immediate contact with the world's sorrow and and pain and need; that was what gave him his precedence. Lead on, man! Jesus follows. How strange! It seemed to me that we might take this as one of the passages that remind us of the Lord's humanity, showing how He was shut out by limitation of knowledge, how He must wait until some one came and showed Him the home where the shadow of death was. I suppose it is true in some sense, but as you muse upon, you feel it was also an illustration of His Godhood. What kind of message is it that comes with authority to the ears of the Creator? Some story of His creature's need. It is our weakness that moves God, our humility, emptiness. It is our cry of emptiness our cry of need, that moves God. If it were possible to conceive of such a thing as the limitation of the knowledge of God—if you could conceive of yourself as going into the presence of God and informing Him that somewhere in some forgotten corner of His universe there was some unknown creature, unknown to Him, that was perishing for want of Him, and you were the only guide qualified to show the way to that creature, we may say, with all reverence that you could expect God Himself to rise up and follow you. And Jesus rose up and followed Jairus to the house of sorrow. My friends, let us comfort ourselves with the assurance that any such message as that will move the Lord today just as in the days of Jairus. Whatever pain or sorrow there is in your own house or the house of your friend, you may go to Him straightway and tell Him, and when you return you may be sure that you are taking His presence with you. Be sure a man of that kind is a privileged character; he takes precedence of all. When Jairus has finished speaking, Jesus rises up and follows him.

Now that is only the first part of our text. This is the second part: "And so did His disciples." As disciples it was their business to follow Jesus, and now Jesus was following Jairus. Is not this a most excellent example for any loyal church? The question that ought to come to us is the question of leadership, human leadership of a Christian church, and, of course, I shall often expect to find that kind of leadership in the church itself. Men and women experienced in the things of God who can serve as leaders for their younger brethren. It was so in the days of the apostles. Men like Paul who charged the younger members that they should follow him as he was following Christ and it was safe counsel. There are leaders in the church, but the question which our text suggests is whether there may ever be any kind of safe leadership inside the church from outside the church. If any man from outside appears and says "come," would it ever be safe for us to follow? Certainly not always. If Christian people are too ready to walk after everybody who beckons them they are likely to wander away from the Master. There comes some new teacher with great pretensions of wisdom who says, "Come, I will lead you into higher regions than your master has been able to show you." Any church that follows such may make up their mind that they will soon lose the Master. Or, again, it may be some high church official who says he will lead you to regions of religious assurance that you have not found in following your Master. In the old days it would have been the High Priest; in our day it might be the ancient and splendid hierarchy of the army of Rome, but you and I are persuaded that it is more blessed to follow the Master "who not having seen we love." Christ has never consented that we should follow any human priest. Then, again, the church might consent to follow Caesar or some representative of political power in the world. In following Caesar we run the risk of losing the more important guidance of Jesus. No political power, no human prestige, no wisdom of the human understanding is a safe guide for any church of Christ.

Then can you conceive of any human leadership that it would be safe for the church or disciples to follow? Yes. Here is this man, Jairus, who comes from outside with this pitiful story, and Jesus rises and follows him, and so do His disciples. Any man who knowns the way to any kind of human sorrow or need or wrong may claim a hearing from any church of Jesus Christ, and if in the hearing they find he knows the way better than we, he may claim not only a hearing, but the following from the church of Jesus Christ. It is direct imitation of His example. The church has often been too slow; sometimes because we did not like the man who called. The personal character of the leader does not come into the question at all. We want all those in sorrow to know that the best place to come is always the church of Jesus Christ. That the message will receive the promptest attention, and no poor Jairus need ever go home along. Once his story was finished, Jesus got up and followed him, and so did His disciples. If we are disciples, it is our business to be following Christ. But how to follow Him? Who will lead us? I have no doubt that sometimes our Lord shows us the way by those older and wiser in the church and sometimes He exercises His Leadership through those without the church, messengers telling us of some one who needs help, and our business as Christians, not only as churches, but as individuals, is to be listening always for that appeal, looking only to the path that leads to the house where they need us. We cannot see the face of Jesus, we cannot hear His voice; it may even seem to some of us that we have lost the comforting sense of Jesus in our hearts. We ask why He did not leave some guide whom we could see and follow and who would lead us back to Him and before the words are out of our lips here stands this Jairus. "Come" he says, and you listen and you rise up and follow him, and as soon as you do something tells you that you are not any longer walking alone. That lost companionship you were mourning for has been restored to you. This was His guide, and you have done well to follow him.

This is not my fancy. Let me read you the plain words of the history: "While he spake, behold! there came a certain ruler, and when he saw Jesus he fell at his feet and besought him, saying, 'My little daughter lieth at the point of death. I pray thee come and lay thy hand upon her and she shall live, and Jesus arose and followed him, and so did his disciples."

Doers of the Word.

To be simply a hearer of God's Word is not only to deceive oneself, but to increase one's responsibility. "Inasmuch as ye did it not" is a sharp sentence which Jesus one day passed upon His unfaithful followers. It is a great thing to remember that God's Word may be translated into Christian living. If for each day we should be guided by one single precept, in the process of time we would come to know our Bibles as thoroughly as we know our own names, but we would also come to the place where the revelation of Jesus Christ would be very attractively presented to one who might not read God's Word, but who would study our lives. "Be ye therefore doers of the Word, and not hearers only."

Look Upward.

I cannot understand why those who have given themselves up to God and His goodness are not always cheerful; for what possible happiness can be equal to that? No accidents or imperfections which may happen ought to have power to trouble them, or to hinder their looking upward.—St. Francis de Sales.

Our Pilot.

Our Father's hand is at the helm of the universe, not ours. Do not try to carry the labors of the deck hand and the responsibilities of the Pilot. "Trust in the Lord with all thy heart. * * * In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths."

God We Can Trust.

Help us to reach out past things we cannot understand to the God we can trust. We thank Thee for the passing of what changes and the changelessness of that which passes not.—Mattbie D. Babcock.

Quaint and Curious

No bird of prey has the gift of song.

Germany breeds 250,000 canaries every year.

A curious butterfly exists in India. The male has the left wing yellow and the right one red; the female has these colors reversed.

A pheasant has built her nest on one of the butts of a military rifle range at Ticehurst, England. She has not been hit yet, and evidently does not expect to be, the soldiers doing their best to justify her confidence.

The shooting fish, a native of the East Indies, has a hollow, cylindrical beak. When it sees a fly on the plants that grow in shallow water, it ejects a single drop of water, which seldom misses, and, striking the fly into the water, the fish obtains its prey.

Japan has a wonderful avenue of trees extending from the town of Namonda to Nikko. This avenue is fully fifty miles in length, and the trees are the tryptomera. Each tree is perfectly straight, and from 130 to 150 feet in height, and twelve feet to fifteen feet in circumference.

Many animals feign illness. In military stables cases are recorded of horses pretending to be lame in order to avoid going to a military exercise. A certain chimpanzee had been accustomed to receive cake when ill. After his recovery he often feigned coughing in order to procure dainties.

A German student finds one of the causes of the inability of the Russian railroads to handle their traffic is the antiquity of their locomotives. The number of these seems intolerable in proportion to the traffic, for out of 14,326 locomotives no less than 6919 are from twenty-four to forty-six years old.

A curious fact is brought out in the official correspondence regarding the recent disturbances in British Guiana. It appears that some of the women arrested in the course of the riots were sentenced to have their hair cut. This is a legal punishment in the colony, but the Earl of Elgin has intimated that women are not again to be punished in this manner.

Some queer recent judicial decisions in Victoria are mentioned in the Australian Review of Reviews. A man who embezzled some money from a bank has received a sentence of nearly three years' imprisonment, while a man who murdered his mother by stabbing her to the heart received only one year, and another man who shot his sister and killed her was sentenced to only two years, and immediately after that a man who wrote a letter to another man threatening to kill him received three years' imprisonment.

TORTURE RELICS ON SALE.

Drunkard's Cloak, Iron Boot and a Foot Squeezer.

Several torture relics were put up for auction at Stevens', Covent Garden, London, some days ago, but they did not excite much competition. There were no eager calls, even for a hangman's rope. A paltry 7s. was all that was given for one which had been used by the renowned Berry, says the London Daily News.

An iron screw, or foot squeezer, was bought for £1, and the same figure was paid for a set of double stocks, and also for what is termed a "drunkard's cloak."

The last named is one of those instruments of old which was intended to put the delinquent to shame. It is shaped like a huge pail, and the drunkard who was to be disgraced was fastened into it with only his head visible through a narrow aperture at the top. The cloak gave the wearer the minimum of room, the hands being practically pinned to the sides, and walking was only possible in a kind of shuffling movement.

Other articles sold were an ancient whipping post with shackles from Oxford, two sets of shackles which were used in old Newgate Prison, ancient branding iron and an iron "boot," into which the victim's naked foot was placed and boiling oil poured in, all of which sold at 12s. each.

An ancient chair from the Castle of Noremburg, in which people were secured for torture, fetched 18s., and an iron torture collar with spikes, 21s.

The Flight of Seeds.

Most persons probably think that winged seed from trees travel to great distances on the wind. But the studies of Doctor Ridley, of the Botanic Gardens at Singapore, indicate that winged seeds have a far narrower range of flight than do "powder" seeds and plumed seeds. The greatest distance traveled by the winged fruit of a forest tree, observed by Doctor Ridley, was 100 yards. Under the most favorable circumstances, he calculates, it would take this plant 100 years to spread 300 yards, and 1,500,000 years to spread from the Malay Peninsula to the Philippines, if a land connection existed.

The Angora goat furnishes most of the hair which adorns ordinary dolls. This product is valued at $40,000,000 a year.

COMPLETEST BUSINESS BUILDING

Features of W. L. Douglas' Administration and Jobbing House.

The dedication of the new administration and jobbing house building erected at Brockton, Mass., by the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co. as a part of its mammoth manufacturing plant at Montello was marked by the thoroughness and attention to detail characteristic of the firm in all its undertakings. As the new building is said to be the most complete and convenient of any ever built for a commercial house in the United States, so were the expressions of appreciation by the many persons who visited it for inspection sincere and of a highly congratulatory nature.

The dedicatory program included open house from 11 a. m. to 8 p. m. with concert by the Mace Gay orchestra and the presence of a Boston caterer to attend to the wishes of all. The building itself afforded a feast for the eye, especially the offices, which are marvels in many ways. Fifteen thousand invitations were sent out, including over 11,000 to the retail dealers in the United States, who handle the W. L. Douglas Co. shoes, the others going to shoe manufacturers and all allied industries in Brockton and vicinity. Mr. Douglas will be glad to have anybody who is interested call

The new building is situated just north of the No. 1 factory on Spark street, facing the Montello railroad station. Its completion marks the establishment of a modern up-to-date wholesale jobbing house and office building. Mr. Douglas has long considered the advisability of a jobbing house, not only for the purpose of supplying his own retail stores more readily, but that the 11,000 dealers throughout the United States handling the W. L. Douglas shoe might be able to obtain shoes for immediate use with greater facility.

Under the present system all shoes are manufactured to order, and customers sometimes lose sales waiting for shoes to arrive. With the new jobbing house they will be enabled to have their hurry orders shipped the same day they are received, which will be far more satisfactory to the customer and will result in a largely-increased business to the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co.

The new building is 260 feet long and 60 feet wide and two stories in height. The jobbing department will occupy the entire lower floor, while the offices will occupy the second floor.

Leaving the new jobbing house on the first floor, the main staircase ascends to the second floor level in two divisions separating on the first landing and meeting again upon the fourth, where the large Palladian window is situated, which appears over the entrance.

At the head of the staircase in the mosaic floor appears the word "Atrium," the name of the inner hall, planned and decorated after the manner of the central apartment of the Pompeiian house. This room is directly in the center of the main building, being 26x68 and 16 feet in height, and is lighted by three large ceiling skylights of classic design.

Around the atrium are placed the private offices, where the heads of the departments are located, with their assistants. Beginning at the right of the main entrance, in order, are those of the C. F. Richmond, buyer; H. T. Drake, general superintendent; Hon. W. L. Douglas, president; and H. L. Tinkham, treasurer. They are finished and furnished in mahogany and are ensuite. Mr. Douglas' own room occupies the southwest corner of the building, and is a very handsome apartment. To the left of these comes the room of C. D. Newins, assistant treasurer, Mrs. Marion Shields, correspondence clerk, and the store department.

On the east of the atrium and opening into this hall are two alcoves separated by mahogany counters, the fronts of which are plate glass and grilles of bronze. These are the offices of Warren Weeks, paymaster, and Harry L. Thompson, the bookkeeper.

The next in order to the left are two rooms devoted to the credit department, one the private office of A. T. Sweetser and the other occupied by his clerks. The next two offices are those of F. L. Erskine, advertising manager, and his assistants.

The three other rooms completing the outer wall line of the atrium are the reception room to the left of the staircase hall, directors' room and lavatory and the sample room. Here are located the telegraph instruments, telephone switchboard and booths for use of guests.

The directors' room is a fine chamber occupying the space in the northwest corner of the building. This room is finished and furnished in mahogany and all appointments are in keeping. Here hangs a portrait in oil of Mr. Douglas, the president. The last room in this series is the sample room, also in mahogany.

On center with the entrance and between the bookkeeper's alcove and the credit department is a hall leading to the general bookkeeping room, where is located the host of clerks which this huge business employs.

A German scientist, after several years spent in experiments, has calculated the value of a flash of lightning in electric current at $1,400.

Demand for the Bible.

The sale of the Bible increases with wonderful rapidity. During the year ending March, 1906, nearly 6,000,000 copies of the scriptures were circulated by the British and Foreign Bible Society, which exceeded the society's previous highest output by 33,000 copies. This is the more remarkable in the face of the disturbed conditions which have prevailed in Russia, China and Japan, where some of the society's heaviest sales take place. The polyglot nature of the Bible society's work is instanced in the fact that at Winnipeg, for example, the scriptures were supplied in forty-three different languages, while at Johannesburg versions in fifty-two languages were sold at the depot in that city, and a fifty-third was asked for by a newcomer, who demanded a Bible in Icelandic, which the agent had not in stock. During the past year eleven new languages have been added to the society's list of versions.

Tree 6,200 Years Old.

The distinction of being the oldest living thing undoubtedly belongs to one of the giant trees, and many attempts to locate it and determine its age have been made. A century ago De Condolle found two yews—one at Fortingal, in Perthshire, and one at Hedsor, in Bucks—that were estimated to be respectively 2,500 and 3,240 years old. Both are still flourishing, and the older tree has a trunk twenty-seven feet in circumference. A gigantic boabob in Central America, with a trunk twenty-nine feet through, was thought by Humboldt to be not less than 5,150 years old. Mexican botanists believe that they have discovered a life-span even greater than this, and from the annual rings in a cypress of Chapultepec, whose trunk is 118 feet in circumference, as assigned an age of about 6,200 years.

Origin of Italics.

Italic letters were first used about the year 1500 by Aldus Manutinus, a Venetian printer. He observed the many inconveniences resulting from the vast number of abbreviations which were then so frequent among the printers that a book was difficult to understand. A treatise was actually written on the art of reading a printed book and thus addressed to the learned. By introducing the italic letter he contrived an expedient by which these abbreviations might be entirely got rid of and yet books suffered little increase in bulk. He dedicated his invention to the Italian states; hence the name. It has also been distinguished by the name of the inventor and called the Aldine. The first book printed in italics was an edition of "Virgil," printed at Venice by Aldus in 1501.

The glass lens has been brought to a diameter of about five feet for astronomical purposes, but when of such size the cost is tens of thousands of dollars and several years of time. The Hungarian chemist who has at last made a successful fluid lens claims that it equals the glass product in performance. It consists of two curved plates of thin and and unsually hard glass, between which is hermetically sealed the fluid substance, and the refractive power and other properties are so adjusted that the usual defects of lenses are overcome. Time and temperature do not affect the fluid, while the contraction and expansion are practically the same as those of the enclosing glass. A ten-inch lens that has hitherto cost about $2,000 can be made by the new process for $40 or less. The saving is even greater with larger sizes, and it is believed that, instead of having reached the highest possible limits, lenses can now be made three times as large as any yet produced.

AGGRAVATING ECZEMA.

Troubled Badly For Several Years With Eczema on Limbs—Another Wonderful Cure by Cuticura.

"For several years I was troubled badly with an eczema on my limbs and wrists. Physicians in several towns had prescribed for me without giving me any results. I had often used Cuticura Ointment and received relief temporarily. In the spring of 1904 I took the Cuticura Resolvent Pills and used the Cuticura Ointment for about five weeks, and at the end of that time there was not a blotch on me anywhere. This spring I took a few vials of the Cuticura Resolvent Pills as a precautionary measure, and will continue to do so every spring simply as a spring tonic, as they are so easy to carry with you, and they certainly fix your blood for the ensuing year. I now use only Cuticura Soap. The Cuticura Ointment and Pills certainly cured me of an aggravated case of eczema. St. Clair McVicar, San Antonio, Texas, July 6, 1905."

BLOATED WITH DROPSY.

The Heart Was Badly Affected When the Patient Began Using Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Elizabeth Maxwell, of 415 West Fourth St., Olympia, Wash., says: "For over three years I suffered with a dropsical condition without being aware that it was due to kidney trouble. The early stages were principally backache and bearing down pain, but I went along without worrying much until dropsy set in. My feet and ankles swelled up, my hands puffed and became so tense I could hardly close them. I had great difficulty in breathing, and my heart would flutter with the least exertion. I could not walk far without stopping again and again to rest. Since using four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills the bloating has gone down and the feelings of distress have disappeared."

The province of Quebec, Canada, has a new license law respecting non-resident commercial travelers employed by persons having no place of business in Canada. Under this law a commercial traveler doing business in that province must pay from $100 to $400 per annum license. The tax is not a popular one, even in Canada, but there is no immediate prospect of its abrogation.

Exportation of Manufactures.

The rapid growth in the exportation of manufactures is shown in the fact that the February exports in 1906 were nearly three times as great as those of 1896 and $7,000,000 greater than those of February, 1905.

OPERATION AVOIDED

EXPERIENCE OF MISS MERKLEY

She Was Told That an Operation Was Inevitable. How She Escaped It.

When a physician tells a woman suffering with serious feminine trouble that an operation is necessary, the very thought of the knife and the operating table strikes terror to her heart, and our hospitals are full of women coming for just such operations.

Miss Margret Merkley

There are cases where an operation is the only resource, but when one considers the great number of cases of menacing female troubles cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after physicians have advised operations, no woman should submit to one without first trying the Vegetable Compound and writing Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice, which is free.

Miss Margret Merkley, of 275 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"Loss of strength, extreme nervousness, shooting pains through the pelvic organs, bearing down pains and cramps compelled me to seek medical advice. The doctor, after making an examination, said I had a female trouble and ulceration and advised an operation. To this I strongly objected and decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The ulceration quickly healed, all the bad symptoms disappeared and I am once more strong, vigorous and well."

Female troubles are steadily on the increase among women. If the monthly periods are very painful, or too frequent and excessive—if you have pain or swelling low down in the left side, bearing-down pains, don't neglect yourself, try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Rate of Veterans' Death.

Veterans of the civil war are dying now at the rate of 10 a day, according to the records of the United States pension office. The monthly reports for several months past have shown the death rate among the old soldiers to be in the neighborhood of 3,000 a month. Pension office officials who have watched the figures closely and know the tendency of the death rate are of the opinion that the number of civil war pensioners has reached the maximum and that hereafter each succeeding month will show a decrease.

* * * * * * * * * *

Be sure and register when the registrars are in your beat, as the only excuse for not doing so is by reason of sickness of yourself or in your family, or by absence from the county. Everybody can register this summer who will be qualified by residence or age by the 8th day of November. Poll tax paying has nothing to do with registration; you can register now and pay your poll tax afterwards, but you cannot vote unless you are both registered and have paid your poll tax (if any is due). The period of residence necessary to register is two years in the State, one year in the county and three months in the beat. If you have moved from one beat to another in the county less than three months before election day, you can vote in your old beat, so you don't lose your vote by changing beats. Any one who desires to register on property qualification should take with him his last assessment sheet and tax collector's receipt to show to the registrars as proof that you are possessed of such property and pay taxes on it. You can register under ANY of the following heads:

1. If you own forty acres or more land in this State, and reside upon it.
2. If your wife owns forty acres or more land in this State, upon which you reside.
3. If you own real estate in this State that is assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
4. If your wife owns real estate in this State assessed for taxation at $300 or more.
5. If you own personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
6. If your wife owns personal property in this State assessed for taxation for $300 or more.
7. If you can read and write any section of the constitution of the United States.

Don't give up your life certificate that you got in 1902; you only have to show it to the registrars in case you have moved to this county from some other county.

THE UNION will furnish any one information on any special points that they may be in doubt upon, and stands ready to help any one to get all the rights he is entitled to under the laws of Alabama. If you think you are entitled to register and the registrars should refuse you, take a couple of good men with you so you can have witnesses as to such refusal and the reasons given by the registrars, and thereby be enabled to take your case upto high authority. tf

Defects of Our Criminal Law

By George W. Alger.

THERE are two reasons why criminal law reform is a practical problem today. One is the repression by that reform of lynch law. The other is not less important. We need reform because the social condition of our day imperatively demands a substantial increase in the scope and power of criminal law, a system strong enough to meet the new and increasing requirements of our civilization for correction and repressive criminal law. A system too complicated to deal out certain justice to common offenders, ignorant, brutal, poor in purse and influence, can never adequately deal with our class of big business criminals, with the man who get rich by fraud, the corporation inflaters and wreckers, the faithless trustees and grafting directors, the exploiters of municipalities, the magnates who give bribes and the men who take them, the trust operators who sin against honesty in business, who break the law against monopolies, who give and take forbidden rebates. Can predatory wealth, powerful, influential, often intrenched in office, be punished by a system which creaks, groans, and often breaks down, in bringing the border ruffian to justice?—The Atlantic.

There was nothing else in the world which Norah Leahy, competent scrub woman, feared as much as a thunder storm. Her accounts of experiences during the summer were always sure to contain a few thrilling incidents connected with heavy showers.

"The wurrst time iver I had was in the Herald buildin' wan Satherday in the summer o' ninety-foor," Mrs. Leahy is certain to tell a new listener. "In the middle o' the afthernoon, whin they'd all gone from the upper floor, an' I was there wid me mop, there came up the fearfullest storm that iver I saw.

"Whin it burrst, I ran to a coat-closet an' shut mesilf in, an' I says to mesilf, 'Whin the thunder dies down, I'll step out, and not befoor.' An', if you'll belave me, I was two full hours shut in that closet, wid no vintilation but me own breath."—Youth's Companion.

Food for Nervous People.

As a rule, salt meat is not adapted to the requirements of nervous people, as nutritious juices go into the brine to a great extent. Fish of all kinds is good for them. Raw eggs, contrary to the common opinion, are not as digestible as those that have been well cooked. Good cream, sweet butter and lean meat are the best food for the nerves. People troubled with insomnia and nervous starting from sleep and sensations of falling can often be cured by limiting themselves to diet of milk alone for a time. An adult should take a pint at a meal and take four meals a day. People with weakened nerves require frequently a larger quantity of food than those whose nerves and digestion are strong. It aids the digestion of these by making it soluble, and seems to have a direct tonic effect.

words through your paper Mr. First, I want to say to Crichton: I notice you said last week that I had an office without room for it. I want to tell you, Mr. Crichton, you need not fret about that, there isn't any politics in that, for if there were it would be of no interest to me. It was for the convenience of my company (and they are mighty nice gents). Now, Mr. Crichton, I hope you notice through THE UNION to stop sending me your paper, as you are so narrow and contracted that you have to jump on me for such little petty things as that. I don't want to read your paper any more. So now I want to tell you and all others that should want to hide anything from me, just stick it in the UNION and it will be hid from me. Then you will say a good deal about this, but when you do it, you know that it is hid from me. Mr. Crichton, my subscription will run out in December next, but I advise you that, so don't send me your paper any longer.

A word to Hon. L. B. Pounds: My friend, I noticed your letter in Polk's UNION in regard to me. I want to tell you that I appreciated it very much, and if I can ever do you you need not hesitate to call on me, even if it is at the hour of night. Very respectfully,

MOSES A. KILLGORE.

Union:

Once more again with but little news. Mrs. Mims, who has been attending school at Hamilton, is at home again. Mr. Eiland and family, of Piper, have returned home after a two weeks' visit to Chilton, which is their old home. Mr. A. J. Lumpkin and Z. J. Jones, of Fairfield, spent Saturday night with Mr. A. Eiland's family. I want to say a few words on Slander-mongers. The meanest man or woman in general society (no matter what the others or ones have done) is the one that will hatch up a falsehood to destroy the good name and character of an innocent person and circulate it by inuendoes, inveracities, suspicions and insinuations. No poison has been well disseminated throughout the community. It is possible for a mean long-tongued slanderer to watch out and start a lie that will follow a young girl to her grave and ruin her reputation. I have known things to be repeated for years together and said that were as cruel as the foul-tongued slander-monger is the meanest creature that infests the earth. There are people who make a habit of visiting in other families to supply themselves with topics for discussion when they go into other homes to gossip and flirt. Others dit on other lives and reputations. They become interesting talkers when there is much gossip spiced with slander, these long-tongued gossips spare no one, they ply their tongues on their own kin folks as well as strangers. They love gossip for gossip's sake, and leave a trail behind them marked by unhappiness and disgust at the busy bodies. The world says a tale beare is worse than a thief. A mischief maker will start a lie to hurt another's name and times worse than a thief. Of course, would miss the mischief takes, but the scars that the wearer makes are like cut in stone or iron to stay forever. Do you such people never give a thought to the fact that time in its flight is carrying us, moment by moment, day by day, and year by year, into endless eternity. Well, I will close to "It's Just Me" from Union again and give our views some more advice, as it is greatly needed.

CARD—S. E. WALDRUP.

Jemison, Ala., Route 3,
July 16, 1906.

Editor Union:

As my name is to be announced for County Commissioner from the Second District, I will say that I did not intend to offer for an office at all, but being solicited by different men and from various parts of the county, I have decided to do as I have done in the past. When my people demanded I have served in whatever it was. So let me say to the people: That I will serve you to the best of my ability, and will take pride in trying to build up our beloved county. Now to the voters for our ticket: Owing to the condition of my family, I cannot canvass at all, and hope that the people will not think hard of me for not coming to see them, but I hope to get their support. While I don't promise you that I will make you a better Commissioner than Bro. Glasscock, neither are we dissatisfied wth his work, but we think a change is now expected and would be to the best interests of our party. We trust that Bro. Glasscock will not think hard of us, for we have helped him many times. Let me say again that I can't leave him to visit you all, but our county officers can tell you all anything you want to know about me. So, friends, I now leave it with you, hoping for success at your hands. S. E. WALDRUP.

FOR GOODGAME.

Clanton, July 17, 1906.

Editor Union:

Please give me a little space in your paper to say a few words for my friend, J. F. Goodgame. You know I was always a Democrat until I was in Clanton one day hearing him tell why laboring people should vote the Republican ticket, and he made it so plain I said he was all right. So I have been a straight Republican ever since. I want to say he is the man for Sheriff, and I think that the voters of Chilton county will say the same. So, Pops and Republicans, come on and help give him the biggest majority any man has had in ten years. Where would we have been two years ago but for him? You all know what he did. I had the pleasure of hearing the people in Beats 1 and 2 tell how he had stood for the people's cause. He was born in Chilton county. So we had better take a man we all know, and a man that is competent and has always done his duty to his fellow man. So I say, hurrah for Goodgame. Yours for the ticket. BEAT FOUR.

BARBECUE AT STANTON.

Editor Union:

Kindly allow me space for a few words. I see that there is quite a lively contest for the Sheriff's office. However, if Felix J. Fitts is as successful in all parts of the county as he is here, he will have no trouble in winning out. Now, I want to say that there is going to be a barbecue at Stanton on Saturday, July 21. We want everybody to come, and especially the candidates, so they all can enjoy themselves together. Wishing success to The Union and its readers

We expect a wonderful time, such as we never had before; we expect souls to be born into the kingdom of God. Brothers L. P. Adams and H. T. Roddy and many other workers will be present. Everybody invited to come and get salvation.

ALABAMA GLEANINGS.

Items of Interest Gathered as They Transpire Over the Entire State.

Flooded in Montgomery.

Montgomery, Ala.—A rain storm, nearly approaching a cloudburst, broke upon Montgomery at 6:55 o'clock Saturday evening and continued with remarkable severity until 7:25. In these thirty minutes 2.2 inches of rain fell. Streets were submerged, many cellars were inundated, and probably $2,000 property damage was done.

A water sewer on the Commerce street side of the New Exchange Hotel burst with such force as to break an adjacent water pipe, and in a few seconds there was four and a half feet of water in the basement of the hotel, where the barber shop, billiard parlors, wine rooms and the linen rooms are located. The damage to property in this part of the hotel was estimated as high as $700, with no insurance.

The basement of the Advertiser building was flooded to a depth of about one-half foot, and a number of cellars under large wholesale stores on Commerce street were half filled with water.

Lightning Destroys Brick Works.

Birmingham, Ala.—The plant of the Copeland Brick Manufacturing Company at Pratt City was almost totally destroyed by fire Friday morning about 4 o'clock. During the thunder storm which was raging a bolt of lightning struck the top of the three-story machinery building and set fire to it, the entire structure being burned to the ground. The Pratt City fire department was summoned, but could do nothing with the flames, and the whole plant was demolished with the exception of the boiler house, which was saved by its thick walls. About three years ago the same plant was destroyed by fire, being ignited by a spark from a passing engine.

Night Watchman Killed.
